NEW DEFIANCE GIVEN WILSON BY JAPANESE

Mikado, Through Ambassador, Refuses to Recede from Stand on Alien Land Bill.

CHINDA DELIVERS MESSAGE

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Ambassador Chinda informed the United States through the State Department today that the Japanese governmen would nor recede one whit from the demand that the California Legislature enact no alien land law which would be directed at the Janapese people.

The Japanese ambassador, in person, delivered the Mikado's message to John Bassett Moore, who is the acting Secretary of State in the absence of Mr. Bryan.

A wireless message was immediately flashed to President Wilson, who is away on the Sylph for a three-days' rest. A similar telegram was forwarded to Secretary Bryan on the train which is carrying him to California as the peace messenger of the administration.

Messages Carefully Guarded.

Profound secrecy was maintained as to the contents of these messages and the details of the conference between Counsellor Moore and Viscount Chinda.

"The entire matter is still in suspense," is the only comment Counsellor Moore would be induced to make.

The visit of the Japanese Ambassador to the State Department was but one of the interesting developments in the controversy, the merits of which are now being widely discussed by members of Congress.

The recognized experts on international law say the contention of Japan, that, under the treaty agreement, she is being discriminated against by the California people, is without foundation. To the contrary, it is being claimed that actual discrimination, if any exists, is on the part of Japan against the United States.

Time for Firm Stand.

Senator Elihu Root, whose disinterested opinions are widely accepted as sound, holds that the treaty between this country and Japan does not give the Japanese any rights to purchase or hold lands for agricultural purposes. He analyzes the proposed alien law of California as a question only of property which in no way represents an infringement. The same authority characterizes the repeated protests of Japan as dangerous to the peace of this country and maintains that the time has come when the United States should take a firm stand and settle the problem of Asiatic immigration for all time.

Senator Lodge, also a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, is understood to agree with Senator Root. Lodge has said privately that the Japanese are growing more and more insistent and he does not think their attitude one that should be ignored.

Argument Fails to Hold.

The arguments being made by the pro-Japanese agitators that the existing laws of Japan are most ligberally worded, is being met with the statistical facts that the clauses granting land rights to Americans have never been made effective.

Here is the law enacted by Japan in 1910 following the acute controversy with the United States on the subject of Japanese in public schools and immigration:

"Foreigners domiciled or resident in Japan and foreign judicial persons registered there shall enjoy the right of ownership in lands, provided always that in the countries to which they belong such right is extended to Japanese subjects and Japanese judicial persons; and provided further in case of foreign judicial persons that they shall obtain permission of the Minister of Home Affairs in acquiring such ownership.

"The foreign provisions shall be applicable only to foreigners and foreign judicial persons belonging to the countries to be designated by imperial ordinance.

Assuming the good faith of Japan the United States, in 1911, entered into another treaty with the country, from which the following is an extract:

Decree Never Issued.

The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other, to carry on trades, wholesale or retail, to own or lease or occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease lands for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade, upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

It is now admitted even by State Department officials that the Japanese law is no more than a proposal for a law without the imperial ordinance. Such an ordinance has never been issued, although the draft of the measure ap-

Legislature of California Won't Receive Bryan

Progressives Put Case All Up to Governor Johnson; Democrats May Meet Secretary in Nevada.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 26.—The California Legislature will not allow any resolution appointing a committee to meet Secretary of State Bryan to pass. This action was determined on today.

The Progressives assert that the Secretary is coming as a guest of the Governor and not the Legislature, and that matter is entirely in Governor Johnson's hands. They will endeavor to block any sort of conference with the Legislature.

The Democrats have not determined definitely what action will be taken. It is probable that representatives of the Democrats will go to Nevada and meet Mr. Bryan, consulting with him on the train.

Labor Amendment Offered by Curley

Boston Congressman Would Change Constitution to Provide for Uniform Laws.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—An amendment to the Constitution which, when ratified by two-thirds of the States, would give Congress the power to make uniform the hours of labor throughout the United States is proposed in a resolution introduced in the House by Representative Curley of Massachusetts.

Representative Curley contends that the difference in hours of labor in many States, varying from fifty-four hours a week in Massachusetts to sixty-six hours in the Southern States, creates an "unwarranted discrimination" in favor of manufacturers located in States where the long hours prevail. It was for the purpose of eliminating this discrimination that the resolution was offered.

SUFFRAGE FOES AID EVIL FORCES

Dr. Anna Shaw Denounces 'Antis' as Screen Behind Which Iniquity Works.

PRAISE HEARST EDITORIAL

WASHINGTON, April 26.—"The anti-suffragists form a screen behind which are the forces of evil who lead in the fight against woman suffrage," said Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw today to the Senate committee on woman's suffrage. "It is the forces of the saloon, the liquor interests, the cheap theatre, the lepers of organized white slavery, that have defeated suffrage wherever it has met defeat in this country."

"There are two things I cannot understand," continued Dr. Shaw. "Why a Democrat or a Daughter of the American Revolution can ever be opposed to woman suffrage. Yet I have found both Democrats and D. A. R. members who have been opposed—and in the case of the D. A. R. it is a remarkable thing. For the suffragist is fighting the very thing the D. A. R.'s ancestors battled against—taxation without representation."

Read from Hearst Editorial.

Mrs. Helena Gardner of Washington, in her speech quoted from a recent article by William Randolph Hearst. She said:

"In a very remarkable article written recently by that very distinguished Democrat and American, William Randolph Hearst, in speaking of the framing of the American Constitution, he said: 'On the other hand were Democrats and Republicans who believed both in the letter and in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, who were convinced that a new order of things was both advisable and advantageous, that the old established systems of government bya superior class were failures and that government by all the people was not only the most just and righteous, but the most practical and successful form of government that could be devised.'"

"Did Mr. Hearst mean this?" continued Mrs. Gardner. "We have no reason to believe otherwise and he has furnished a great suffrage argument when he says that all governments by a superior class were failures and that government by all the people was the only righteous or just one. Are women people?"

Wilson To Prove Case.

Considerable amusement was occasioned by the adroit fashion in which some of the speakers turned extracts from President Wilson's recent book, "The New Freedom," into suffrage arguments? Over and over again his words "I will not live under trustees if I can help it. If any part of our people want to be wards, if they want to have guardians put over them, if they want to be taken care of, if they want to be children, patronized by the government, why I am sorry because it will sap the manhood of American were used to describe the condition of American women today.

Among the speakers were Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, wife of the Senator from Wisconsin; Mrs. William Kent, wife of Representative Kent of California; Mrs. Philander Claxton, wife of the Commissioner of Education; Miss Helen Varick Boswell of New York city and Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, wife of the pure food advocate.

RESCUED FROM RESERVOIR

Lads Fell Off Rafts; Saved by Autoists

But for the alertness of William R. Kensington and Henry Worthley of Manchester, N. H., who were motoring past Lexington reservoir yesterday afternoon, three boys, who had been on rafts in the water and fell in, would have probably been drowned.

The boys, George J. Mulford, thirteen, of Lincoln street, Lexington, and Francis and Raymond Frothinghom, aged thirteen and eleven years, of Middle street, Lexington, were heard screaming by Worthley and Kensington, who rescued the lads.

POLICEMAN BEATEN UP.

Reserve Officer Badly Hurt by Gang While Trying to Make Arrest.

Reserve Officer John E. Curran of the Hanover Street Station was severely beaten last night by a gang of twenty-five men while trying to arrest one of the number for drunkenness at the corner of Commercial and Prince streets. Eight reserve officers were hurried out from the station to aid Curran. The latter was knocked down, kicked and rolled about the street. He lost his helmet and his revolver was wrenched from his hand. Curran was given medical treatment at the police station. No arrests were made.

DORCHESTER BOY RUN DOWN BY AUTO

John O'Connor Probably Fatally Hurt—Became Confused in Crossing the Street.

John O'Conner, eight years old, of No. 127 Spencer street, Dorchester, was run down and probably fatally injured yesterday afternoon, in Talbot avenue, Dorchester, by an automobile operated by Herbert S. Woodworth, nineteen years old, of No. 7 Lindsey street.

According to witnesses, Woodworth, who was driving the car belonging to his father, Herbert H. Woodworth, tried to avoid hitting the boy. In his vain endeavor to clear the confused lad, he ran his car up over a sidewalk, into a bank, breaking the springs.

The boy had been playing on the sidewalk. His playmates warned him, but instead of standing still, he ran into the front of the auto.

Woodworth took the boy to his home in the car. Dr. A. H. Davidson attended him, and ordered his removal to the City Hospital, where he is not expected to live.

HOTEL CASHIER OWN DETECTIVE

Chases Bad Check Man to Station and Gets Back $170 in Cash.

F. W. Adams, cashier at the Copley-Plaza, playing detective on his own account, succeeded in getting back $170, which had been paid to a man supposed to be a fradulent check passer, although the Boston police had trailed the suspect in vain.

Adams had cashed a check for the stranger for $120. Just after the man left the hotel with the money, he learned that a man of the same appearance had just cashed a similar check at the Brunswick for $50.

Immediately suspicious, Adams rushed out to the Back Bay Station, remembering that the check passer had said he was on his way to New York. In the station he saw his man, walked up to him and demanded back the $120 he had just given him. Without argument, Adams got back the cash, which the stranger peeled off a large roll. Adams then demanded the $50 cashed at the Brunswick, and got that, too.

When Adams, who went off for an officer, returned, the man had taken a jump to a moving train for Forest Hills. Searchers at Forest Hills were unable to find him on the train.

Immediately afterward it was learned that the police were searching for the stranger. He had failed to cash a check at Young's, where the cashier had notified the police. Before an inspector arrived, the man, suspicious of the delay, had disappeared.

The clerk at the Parker House had refused to cash one of the checks. At the Adams House the stranger was more successful. And at the Touraine he secured $50 more. At the time the police were close on his trail—a couple of hotels behind him.

The checks were the Dominion Express Company's "Traveler's cheques," signed by R. H. McIligan.

Straw Hats and Open Cars---and in April

Only Three "Lids" in the Downtown District, but They Prove Real Summer Feature.

Apparently old Mister Summer is on the job ahead of schedule time.

Three straw hats were visible among the "lids" worn in the downtown district last night. Moreover, the Elevated had scores of open cars taken out of storage to greet the summerish weather. Then, too, the sun shone down balmily all afternoon. Altogether it was as rare as a day in June, as the poet says. But the straw hats were the big show.

Hundreds along Tremont street greeted with sundry remarks the sight of a straw "lid." About the same time two straw hats were counted on Bedford street, bringing the total for the night up to three.

Wilson Enjoys Sail on Potomac

President and Daughter Eleanor Are Having Two Days' Rest on the Sylph.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—On the advice of his physician, Dr. Carey Grayson, U. S. N., President Wilson threw aside the cares of state today and accompanied by Miss Eleanor Wilson set sail down the Potomac River on board the yacht Sylph. They will return tomorrow night. The destination of the President is unknown to White House attaches. For the next thirty-six hours he will be entirely out of touch with the land except through the wireless on the Sylph.

Dr. Grayson predicted that his patient will return to Washington without the least trace of the intestinal trouble which has indisposed the chief executive for the past week.

Dr. Mary Walker Wears Black Cuffs

Beautiful Diamond Brooch of Feminine Design Also Adorns Her Necktie.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—The eternal feminine has blossomed anew in the heart of Dr. Mary Walker, whose trousers and frock coat have been the envy of less dashing sisters for years. Dr. Mary has put black silk lace cuffs on her very masculine shirt. Furthermore, she is wearing white silk elbow length gloves. In her necktie gleams a diamond brooch of approved feminine design. As she sat in the suffrage hearing today she pulled out a dainty lace handkerchief fragrant with scent.

The rest of her apparel was a black frock coat, striped trousers, bulldog shoes, high silk hat, and her faithful old umbrella.

"I'LL NEVER GO AWAY AGAIN" SAYS STOLEN BORDEN GIRL

Detective Burns Trails Her to the Vendome Where He Finds Her Alone, Deserted By Her Abductress, Mrs. White

After Happy Reunion with Father Girl Who is in a Highly Nervous Condition Is Taken Away for a Quiet Sunday

Whereabouts of Mrs. White a Mystery. Father Says Woman Has a Hypnotic influence. Visited Boston Year ago

UNNERVED by her exciting experience and verging on a physical collapse, Ramona Borden, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Gail Borden, the millionaire condensed milk manufacturer, who was kidnaped from a New Jersey sanitarium last Wednesday, was restored to her father at the Hotel Touraine yesterday by Detective Raymond J. Burns of the Burns Detective Agency of New York.

The girl was alone when found at the Hotel Vendome by Detective Burns.

Mrs. William J. White, one of her abductors and who accompanied her to Boston, disappeared some time Saturday morning, after seeing her picture in the Boston AMERNCAN, together with a story telling of the wide search for the millionaire's daughter.

Mrs. White's present whereabouts are unknown.

A Pathetic Meeting.

The meeting between father and daughter in the lobby of the Touraine was both dramatic and pathetic.

On the stroke of 8 an automobile stopped in front of the hotel. Raymond Burns and an assistant detective, Smith, alighted and helped Miss Borden from the car. They entered the lobby. The girl caught sight of her father, who was impatiently pacing up and down a far end of the place.

"Father, father," she cried, and ran forward and threw her arms about his neck. "Oh, papa, dear," she sobbed, and was hurried into an elevator and thence to an apartment that he had reserved for her.

"Papa, I'll never go away again," was the first remark the highly strung girl made to her anguished father as soon as they reached their suite.

Just what transpired after Miss Borden was taken from the Pompton sanitarium, and while she was conveyed to New England was not explained by Mr. Borden or his representatives. The only object of her companions was, it is said, to influence the girl against her father. But if that were the object it failed as they are completely reconciled. Said Mr. Borden last night:

"Motive I Do Not Know."

It is maddening to me to feel that she was under such influences and yet I was unable to break those influences until I met and talked with my little girl.

What the motive was I do not know. The whole thing is too deep for me, but I am convinced that there is something deeper in the whole affair than I yet know. I am convinced that my daughter's flight was due to the influence exercised over her by Mrs. White and one of her friends. What this influence is I don't know. But I do know that it is strong.

Mrs. White was at Ormond last March when I was there with my daughter. I brought Ramona to Washington with me, but we had no sooner arrived there than Ramona broke away and returned to Savannah.

It was following this that I sought to break up the friendship with Mrs. White. My efforts thus far do not seem to have been of much avail.

I believe Mrs. White has a hypnotic influence over her.

Mr. Borden said he had felt no uneasiness for the safety of his daughter, but was fearful that the excitement might have some serious effects, because of her poor health. The girl is thin and undersized for one of her age, and for some time has been suffering from disordered nerves.

A few minutes after the reunion between father and daughter in the Touraine lobby, two heavily veiled young woman called and asked to see Miss Borden. They went upstairs, stayed a few minutes, then came down. At the Touraine entrance they slipped into a taxicab and directed the driver in a whisper. They raced through the back streets and by a roundabout route to the South Station. They arrived there in time to take a train for New York.

Just where Mr. Borden and his daughter are this morning is a mystery. Mr. Borden told his attorney, Granville Clarke, yesterday afternoon, that he and his daughter would spend Sunday near Boston with friends. Last night it was reported that they had taken an evening train for New York and were spending the night at the Plaza. Mr. Borden's traveling bags are still at the Essex, at which hotel he first registered upon his arrival in Boston yesterday morning.

Another report had it that Mr. Borden and his daughter left Boston last night at 11:30 for Worcester, where rooms had been engaged for them at the Hotel Warren.

It is possible that Miss Borden will be sent to a Canadian convent to complete her education. If this is not done, she may be returned to a sanitarium for a [illegible].

Mr. Borden would not say whether or not he intends to prosecute Mr. White. Before his daughter was recovered, he declared through his agent that he would charge her with abduction. Afterward, he said:

"Oh, let her go. I care nothing about Mrs. White, now that I have Ramona back."

Traced Through Four States.

Miss Borden was kidnaped by two women, Mrs. W. J. White, wife of the chewing gum manufacturer, and by another woman, believed to be Mrs. T. T. Backe of New York. They were traced through four States by the Burns detectives, and a four-day chase ended when Raymond Burns knocked on the door of a room in the Hotel Vendome yesterday afternoon, and his summons was answered by Miss Borden herself.

The kidnaping, the four day's pursuit, and the restoration of Miss Borden to her father's arms, were all sensational, and attended by remarkable features.

The underlying motive of the kidnaping is found in a strange tale of the fascination of a woman by a girl. The secret seems to lie in Mr. Borden's statement yesterday:

I believe Mrs. White had a hypnotic influence over my daughter.

Certainly, the history of the woman's pursuit of a millionaire's daughter cannot be explained except on the ground that there was a strong bond of friendship between the two.

Detective Burns was not inclined to give any details of the remarkable and successful hunt. All he would say last night was:

Detective Says But Little.

I can only say that I am gratified at having been able to trace the girl so quickly and restore her to her father. I do not feel justified in telling any details of the chase after the two women. That should come from Mr. Borden. I have finished my work, and will leave tomorrow for New York.

Mr. Burns has been in charge of the New York office of the Burns National Detective Agency, since his father, William J. Burns, went abroad some weeks ago. The elder Mr. Burns recently figured in connection with the Martin disappearance mystery in London.

RAYMOND BURNS, the detective who found Ramona Borden at the Vendome and restored her to her father.

Miss Borden was found at the Hotel Vendome, a quiet family hotel on Commonwealth avenue. She was alone in her room when Detective Burns knocked on the door. When she answered his knock she did not seem surprised, and readily agreed to go with him to the Touraine and join her father.

The meeting between the kidnaped girl and her father was an affecting one. Mr. Borden had scarcely slept for four days. The girl was white and tired. When she entered the Touraine lobby she saw her father at once. He was standing near the clerk's desk. They hurried to meet each other.

The girl was crying. There were tears in the man's eyes. She fell into his arms and buried her face on his shoulder. He whispered something in her ear. Detective Burns took her arm, and, supported by her father on one side and the detective on the other, Miss Borden made her way to the elevator. They were hurried to Mr. Borden's apartments.

Miss Borden's abduction was spectacular. Since April 19 she had been at Dr. W. C. Adams' sanitarium at Pompton Lakes, New Jersey. Last Wednesday, with one of the nurses at the institution, she went out for her regular walk in the grounds and along the streets.

An automobile containing two women and driven by a man passed the girl and the nurse and stopped, apparently to repair a tire. After the nurse and her patient had passed the automobile went on, but in a few minutes it returned. The machine stopped at the curb just beside the two. Both of the women in the machine sprang out. They seized Miss Borden by the arm and half dragged, half carried her to the automobile.

Nurse Fought with Women.

The nurse was loyal. She screamed for help and attempted to fight off the two women. The spot was deserted, and no help came. The nurse, clinging to Miss Borden's clothing, was dragged fairly into the machine. The moment the four women were in the tonneau, the automobile started, and a record breaking run was made to the Continental Hotel in Newark.

Miss Borden at the time wore no hat. She was dressed lightly and had on white tennis shoes.

One of the two women kidnapers was Mrs. White. The other, from her description, is believed to have been Mrs. Gacke of Brooklyn, N. Y., friend of Mrs. White.

As soon as the party reached the Continental Hotel, Mrs. White said to the nurse:

"Hadn't you better call up the sanitarium and tell the doctor where we are?"

The nurse, excited and unwary, agreed. And while the nurse was in the telephone booth, the two women with Miss Borden disappeared. When the nurse emerged from the booth she found them gone.

The abductors and the millionaire's daughter took an interurban car out of Newark to New York. From this point Mrs. White's companion disappeared, and the detectives could trace only Mrs. White and the girl.

They went from New York to Atlantic City, and lodged at the Marlboro-Blenheim Hotel. Thence they returned to New York.

Here, for almost two days, the trail was broken. The next trace of the two was found in New Haven. Friday morning Mrs. White and the girl put up at the Taft Hotel.

Detective Burns, through his agents, heard of their presence there. Before he could arrive, however, they had left, and came direct to Boston. They took a double room at the Hotel Vendome, and sent out at once for the newspapers.

Apparently Mrs. White had not realized that the whole country was aroused and hunting her. She read in the AMERICAN that she had been connected with Miss Borden's disappearance.

Mrs. White Disappears.

She saw her picture displayed as the accused kidnaper. And, apparently fearing serious consequences, she left Miss Borden at the Vendome and disappeared. From this point all trace of Mrs. White's movements were lost.

Miss Borden was left alone, in a strange hotel and without friends. She spent Saturday, up to the time of Detective Burns' arrival, reading the newspapers, expecting at any moment that her father or his agents would appear.

Detective Burns, Mr. Borden and Granville Clark, Mr. Borden's attorney, following the trail, arrived in Boston early yesterday morning. They went almost direct to the Hotel Vendome. Burns had information that the hunted woman and Miss Borden had gone there.

At the hotel they ran up against a blank wall. Only four persons had registered during the preceding forty-eight hours. None corresponded in any way to the description of Mrs. White or the girl. Neither the clerk nor the manager of this hotel was able to give the searchers any information.

Mr. Borden went to the Hotel Touraine while Burns prosecuted his search. He secured undeniable evidence that Miss Borden was in the Vendome and returned there shortly after noon.

This time he learned that there was a young girl alone in one of the suites. He went directly upstairs, knocked, and was met by Miss Borden.

After notifying Mr. Borden by phone that his daughter was found, Mr. Burns took the girl to the Touraine.

The kidnaped girl is not pretty. She is of striking appearance however, a girl to attract attention wherever she goes. Although she is only seventeen years old, she appears nearer fourteen. She is five feet two inches tall, and weighs in the neighborhood of 110 pounds. She affects mannish clothes, and when she met her father in the Touraine, wore a dark blue tailored suit, a close-fitting straw hat and men's gloves.

Mrs. White, on the contrary, is an attractive looking woman, about thirty-five years old, above the average height, and weighing about 160 pounds. She has light hair, dresses in striking style, and rarely appears without wearing numerous jewels.

She and her husband have not lived together for six years but are not divorced. His home is in the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, while Mrs. White lives on Riverside drive, New York.

Watched the Steamships.

The kidnaping of Miss Borden roused the police of the whole country. In addition to the pursuit by the Burns detectives, a watch was kept in every large city. Every steamer sailing from the North Atlantic ports yesterday was watched—whether it was bound for Europe or for coast ports. The net was spread nation wide, and the search ended in Boston.

The story of the acquaintance of Mrs. White and Miss Borden is a strange one. Mr. and Mrs. Borden are separated and Mrs. Borden lives in Los Angeles. It is believed that Mrs. White met Miss Borden while the girl was visiting her mother in the Western city.

Since that time they have been together a great deal, and when they have been forcibly separated Mrs. White has made every effort to see the girl. An attache of the Hotel Vendome said yesterday that he remembers that a year ago a girl and a woman corresponding in description to Mrs. White and Miss Borden stayed at the hotel for a time.

April 11 of last year, Miss Borden left the school she was attending, and went to Washington. There Mrs. White joined her, at the Powhattan Hotel. With Mrs. White were her nieces, Miss Violet and Gladys Seldon. The four established themselves in an apartment in Stoneleigh court on Connecticut avenue.

Miss Borden had not told her father of her intention to leave school. He was shocked at the news of her departure, and when no word came within a day or two, set detectives on the case.

They traced the girl to Washington. When they found her, Miss Borden protested against leaving her friend, Mrs. White. She declared she had come to Washington of her own free will, and wished to stay there.

Her father insisted, and later, Miss Borden was sent to Dr. Adams' sanitarium, where she remained till her abduction last Wednesday.

2 MEN RESCUED FROM FATAL MINE

Suffered Terrible Tortures—One Had Written Farewell Message on His Overalls.

PITTSBURG, April 26.—Two men were taken alive in the middle of the night from the Cincinnati mine of the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company at Finleyville, the scene Wednesday noon of a disastrous explosion.

Suffering untold agonies from the shock of an explosion that has already claimed the lives of ninety-six men, the two men, Charles Crawl, aged thirty-six, and Philip Legler, the same age, were brought to the surface, greatly weakened and almost unconscious.

Charles Crawl was also a survivor of the Marianna mine disaster of November 28, 1908, when 154 lives were lost. In that explosion Crawl lost his right eye.

The rescue of Crawl and Legler was effected by J. McVickers and Clyde Gibson, members of the coal company's rescue crew, who entered the mine after the expert helmet men and mining inspectors had given up work for the night. When McVickers and Gibson reached a point two and a half miles from the entrance they heard a faint cry, toward which they groped, and discovered the two miners, barely conscious. They had to be dragged through the long tunnels to the opening.

Crawl is a widower and has two children. The first words when rescued were a plea to see his children at once. He said it seemed as if he had been in the mine for a week.

When Crawl was taken from the mine a message was found scribbled in chalk on the legs of his overalls. The message read, "Good-bye, my children. God bless you."

"Only for Crawl," Legler said, "I would have given up a hundred times, but he urged me on. I never expected to see daylight again, but God was with us and helped us through."

On their trip the two rescuers found the bodies of eight miners, which brings the total known dead up to ninety-six.

ARREST CHUM OF WOBURN SUSPECT

Farmhand About to Leave City Is Held in Connection with Burlington Murder.

Mariano Ferrara, a Woburn farmhand and chum of Joseph Galli, now held on a murder charge in connection with the shooting of Charles O'Brien, a Burlington farmer, last Tuesday night, was arrested in connection with the same shooting just as he was leaving Woburn yesterday afternoon.

He was locked in Woburn jail and will be arraigned tomorrow morning. He has been under surveillance for two days.

He left the farm of Ellis H. Marshall on Cambridge street, Woburn, where he has been employed, at mid-afternoon with his grip. He was arrested on the street by Police Chief Charles F. McDermott and State Officer Silas P. Smith.

This makes the fourth arrest in the case, two other men having been taken in custody, arraigned and then discharged.

Joseph Galli was arrested Thursday after he had failed to give satisfactory account for a cut over one eye and other marks. He was held without bail.

NO LICENSE; FINED $20.

Louis Ettenberg was fined $20 in the South Boston court yesterday for conducting a second-hand clothing store at No. 280 West Broadway without a license. He appealed and was held in $300.

The Real Secret of Rejuvenating the Face

(From The Clubwoman.)

She holds the true secret of facial rejuvenation who has learned how to remove the dead skin particles as fast as they appear. It's a secret anyone may possess. The aged, faded or discolored surface skin may be gradually absorbed, in an entirely safe and rational manner, by the nightly application of ordinary mercolized wax. Within a week or two the underlying skin, youthful and beautiful to behold, has taken the place of the discarded cuticle. So little of the old skin is absorbed each day there's no inconvenience at all, and no one suspects you are putting anything on your face. The mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store (an ounce is sufficient), is applied like cold cream. In the morning it is erased with soap and water. It's the best thing known for freckles, blackheads, pimples, moth patches, liver spots and fine surface wrinkles.

For the deeper wrinkles an excellent recipe is: Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution produces quick and wonderful results.

EATON WILL IN COURT TOMORROW

Judge to Pass on Kelley's Application to Be Named Administrator.

The will of Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, for whose death his widow, Mrs. Jennie May Harrison Eaton, is being held for trial in Plymouth jail, will come before Judge Chamberlain in the Probate Court in Brockton tomorrow, on petition of Judge George W. Kelley of Rockland.

Judge Kelley, who has been Mrs. Eaton's firmest friend since her arrest, has petitioned to be appointed administrator of the Admiral's will, in place of Mrs. Eaton, who was named executrix in the document, but who has declined to accept the responsibility.

On account of the value of the collection of rare souvenirs and books left by the Admiral, it is expected that relatives of the Admiral's first wife, from Lowell, may make some claim to the collections, and perhaps ask for the appointment of an administrator better known to them.

In preparation for this possibility, Judge Kelley, together with Francis J. Geogan, who is Mrs. Eaton's junior counsel, spent the day yesterday at the Eaton house in Assinippi, making an inventory of the collections, and of the other effects of the late Admiral.

They also questioned very carefully Mrs. George Harrison, mother of the accused widow, and Mrs. June Keyes, a daughter. Dorothy Ainsworth Eaton, the other daughter of Mrs. Eaton, was not at home. She spent the day in Plymouth, visiting her mother in jail.

Dorothy took to her mother some violets she had picked in the meadow back of the Eaton home. Mrs. Eaton, who had not expected the visit, was almost overcome, especially when she drew in great breaths of the fragrance of the violets.

"Never before," she told Dorothy, "have I felt so keenly the confinement here within these walls, when everything is just coming to life on the farm."

To Meet Sister She Long Believed Dead

Miss Edith Tenhart of Everett Soon to Meet Pittsburg Woman for First Time in 16 Years.

Like a greeting of the dead come to life will be the welcome which Miss Edith Lenhart, of No. 140 Harvard street, Everett, will give her sister, Miss Lona Lenhart of Pittsburgh, when the latter comes to Boston within a few days. The sisters have been separated for fourteen years. During that time the Boston sister had believed her Pittsburgh sister dead, until a short time ago.

The reunion of the sisters is made possible by Captain Robert E. Grant of the Hyde Park police station. Captain Grant received a letter from the Pittsburg sister asking him to try to find the Boston sister. No young woman of the name could be traced in Hyde Park.

A friend of the Miss Edith Lenhart heard of the hunt and told her about it. She communicated with Captain Grant, and through him learned, for the first time in fourteen years, that her sister, Lona, is still living. Miss Edith Lenhart is twenty-six.

Corned Beef Feast for Harvard Club

Carriages May Be Ordered and Used if Desired, Says Notice of Somerset Gathering.

The men of the Harvard Club of Boston are to sit down to corned beef and cabbage at the Hotel Somerset next Wednesday evening.

Instead of their usual repasts of humming birds' tongues, peacocks' eyes, caviare and such gaudy dishes, the members are invited to a New England boiled dinner.

It is figured that this menu will be a novelty to many of the club members.

The notices also say that "Great Zest" will be given the cornedbeefandcabbageous occasion by the presentation to the club of a "gift of Munificent Magnificence" by one of our great public benefactors (through a personal representative).

Members are notified that carriages should be ordered for 10 p. m. "and used if desired."

No 'Double Play' for Johnson

Pitcher Denies He Is Engaged

Question numbered one is as follows: Has Dan Cupid fumbled trying to work a double play on the matrimonial diamond?

The play which was scheduled was this:

Cupid to Walter Johnson to Miss Anna Bernadine Scully.

Mr. Johnson is the celebrated pitcher for the Washington baseball club.

Miss Scully is the charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Scully of No. 100 Green street, Cambridge.

The play was nicely started in the report that Johnson and Miss Scully were engaged to be married.

Miss Scully, with a becoming blush, did not deny. She remarked, a la baseball:

"Any one who can read the battery signs can make a hit."

She also admitted she was to meet Mr. Johnson next Thursday. That is the date when the Senators are due in Boston to play the Red Sox.

The double play was progressing finely.

But suddenly Dan Cupid dropped the ball. For a dispatch from Philadelphia to the AMERICAN yesterday quoted Mr. Johnson as saying:

"No Wedding Bells."

"No wedding bells for me!"

And then some more information along the same unromantic line.

The dispatch came from Philadelphia, because the Senators played there yesterday. Here is what Mr. Johnson said, when asked about the rumor of his engagement to Miss Scully:

> Please deny emphatically for me that I am to marry Miss Scully. I have the pleasure of Miss Scully's acquaintance, but so have lots of other persons, and there is no reason why I should have been picked out to marry her, unless some one wants to make matters unpleasant for her.
> I am perfectly satisfied to trot along in single harness and take the applause of the crowds when I win a game. This marriage stunt is out of the question for me; it is too expensive and, from what I hear, I am better off single.
> I cannot imagine how the ridiculous report got started, for there is no truth in it and I certainly should not think of asking for two weeks off just as the championship season has started.
> No wedding bells for me.

"No," Says Sister.

It seemed difficult, after that dispatch was received, to make out how Mr. Johnson is engaged to Miss Scully.

Unless Mr. Johnson is concealing the real state of affairs, from bashfulness or policy or merely because.

To sum up the game still more, from the standpoint of the romance fan, Miss Scully's elder sister said last night:

"I didn't know anything about Anna being engaged to Mr. Johnson or to anybody else. The family doesn't know anything about it. Anna knows several ball players and is very fond of the game. But so far as any engagement goes—it is all news to us."

Which indicated, more than ever, that Dan Cupid was playing more like a bush leaguer this season than in his old-time form.

What Miss Scully Says.

Miss Anna Scully denied any engagement with Walter Johnson in the following statement:

"I want to deny this report that I am engaged to Walter Johnson, the Washington pitcher. I don't know how that report started. It is true that, when I was asked about it I did not deny it. But I did say: 'You find out from Mr. Johnson. You may be sure he will give you the right answer.'

"I never thought that would be taken as meaning that we were engaged. I know Mr. Johnson quite well, and admire his playing, but we are not engaged. I certainly never meant to give that view to the report. I shall see Mr. Johnson when the Washingtons arrive Thursday, and explain to him that I did not start the story and did not mean to have it taken that way."

Another eror like that and D. Cupid may get his release.

MISS ANNA B. SCULLY.

STRIKE COST $20,0000,000.

Socialist Leaders Say Belgian Crisis Was Well Worth It.

BRUSSELS, April 26.—The strike for equal suffrage ended in most of the industrial towns of the provinces today. A good many miners, however, still refused to descend the coal pits, but it is believed that by Monday even these insurgents against the orders of the Nationalist Socialist Congress will obey.

Competent economists reckon the money loss caused by the strike at $20,000,000, which the Socialist leaders declare to have been well lost if the country has thereby won equal suffrage.

CHARGE ATTEMPT TO ROB.

Two North End Men Arrested On Federal Street.

Tony Muskillo and Vincenzo Cassato of the North End were arrested last night by the police of the City Hall avenue station on a charge of attempting to rob Thomas J. Roach of No. 84 Bennington street, East Boston. The police accused the two men of trying to rob Roach in a doorway on Federal street. Roach yelled and two patrolmen came to his assistance.

"Turkey Trot" Wins Cup for Miss Smith

Is Best Among Horses at Charity Show by Brookline Riding Club.

Turkey Trot proved one of the big features at the Charity Horse show in the Brookline Riding School building last night. But this Turkey Trot wasn't the dance. It was a saddle horse owned by W. W. Hobbs. In the event for the best ladies' saddle horse, the steed won first and a cup for its rider, Miss Bertha Smith. The trotter also won cups in the events for best trained saddle horse and for saddle horses not over 14.3 hands high.

The other winners were: Runabout horses, won by Charm, owned by Edwin S. Webster; heavyweight saddle horses, won by Minto, Dr. P. J. Cronan; thoroughbred saddle horses, Merry Countess, Mrs. M. Maurice Dimond; combination horses, Rita, Riverview Farm.

The proceeds went into a fund for the Hillside School for Orphaned and Neglected children at Greenwich. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Dorothy Forbes, Mrs. J. DeForest Danielson, Miss Alice Sargent, Samuel D. Parker, Hallum Movius, Colonel Edward B. Emerson and John P. Bowditch.

He Knows Whiskey, and Gets a U. S. Job

Senate Confirms North Carolina Man Who Once Ran One of Those "Drink Cures".

WASHINGTON, April 26.—"From all reports made here this afternoon this man seems to know a good deal about whiskey, and I move that he be confirmed."

That was the characteristic statement of Senator Martine of New Jersey, in executive session yesterday afternoon toward the end of the discussion of the qualifications of William H. Osborne of North Carolina to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Osborne ran a drink cure for many years. The Senate agreed with Senator Martine. He was confirmed.

JUDGE WON'T ACCEPT FEES.

Father of Pension Bill Likens System to Licensing Burglars.

CHICAGO, April 26.—Henry Neil, father of the mothers' pension bill, and who was lately elected a Justice of the Peace in Oak Park Township, announces that he would serve without fees and would introduce Christian methods into the work.

"I accepted this office with the intention of abolishing the entire system of judicial fees," said Mr. Neil. "The system is as evil as would be the licensing of burglars."

Mr. Neil has written letters to all the ministers in Oak Park Township asking their advice on what should be the Christian attitude of a Justice of the Peace toward exisiting laws and customs.

BALL FELLS A BOY.

South Boston Youth Knocked Unconscious and Sent to Hospital.

While playing ball in Commonwealth Park with several companions, John Larkin, seventeen, of No. 140 Broadway, South Boston, was struck in the forehead by a batted ball. Larkin, who was playing in the infield, dropped to the ground unconscious. He was rushed to the Carney Hospital, where he regained consciousness. He received contusions of the head and the doctors say that his injuries are not serious.

SAY REPUBLICANS MAY PUT UP FOSS

Persistent Rumor Afloat That Governor May Be Last Hope of G. O. P.

There is a persistent rumor in State political circles that Eugene Noble Foss, three times DEMOCRATIC Governor of Massachusetts, will be the next REPUBLICAN candidate for the same office.

Winthrop Murray Crane, ex-Governor, ex-United States Senator, and leader of the old line Republicans at the convention last June, visited Boston last night to "look things over and get acquainted with the situation."

It was Ex-Senator Crane's visit that crystalized the rumors anent Governor Foss' possible fourth appearance as a gubernatorial candidate.

Those responsible for the rumor say:

"Governor Foss has appointed ten REPUBLICANS to office for every DEMOCRAT he has so honored."

Governor Foss, by his message to the Legislature, has committed himself as an advocate of high tariff.

Governor Foss is the only candidate with whom the REPUBLICANS can hope to beat David I. Walsh as a DEMOCRATIC candidate.

Governor Foss was a REPUBLICAN not so very long ago. He may be so again.

Last night this question was addressed to a dozen individuals, each high in the councils of the Republican machine.

"Anything To Beat Walsh."

"What do you think of Governor Foss as a REPUBLICAN candidate next Fall?"

A smile lit the countenance of every man addressed.

"Anything to beat Walsh," is the cry of the Grand Old Party leaders. They see their only hope in Foss. They say:

"Governor Foss cannot win as a Democrat—because too many Democrats prefer Walsh. But as a REPUBLICAN, he would pull an immense vote from among his personal adherents in the Democratic ranks."

To justify their position, they point to the fact that it was REPUBLICANS who voted for the resolution which followed Governor Foss' tariff message last week, and that it has been REPUBLICANS who have backed up the Governor on his legislative program, and on his vetoes, in practically every case.

Governor Foss, if he is a candidate for the REPUBLICAN nomination, will have to fight Colonel Everett C. Benton, and Councillors Alexander McGregor of Malden and Augustus H. Goetting of Springfield. If he is a candidate for the DEMOCRATIC nomination he will have to fight David I. Walsh. Republican leaders are saying:

"He can't beat Walsh. He can beat Benton, McGregor or Goetting. That's why he will be the Republican candidate."

And here's the slate they predict will be in the field next Fall:

For Governor:
Republican—Eugene Noble Foss.
Democratic—David I. Walsh.
Progressive—Charles Sumner Bird.

Rumor does not say whether or not Governor Foss has been consulted as to this program. You can't have a wedding without mutual consent.

Has Great Faith in His "Luck."

The Democrats are somewhat skeptical of the feasibility of this plan. Walsh has not indicated positively that he is a candidate.

The Governor has met his only political success in the DEMOCRATIC party. Some of the wise ones point to the fact that the Governor, when he was active in the REPUBLICAN party, accomplished nothing, and was unable, as a candidate for Congress, to hold the Republican vote.

Those who would speculate ot nhe Governor's probable action in case the REPUBLICANS should offer him the nomination, will bear in mind the fact that the Governor is a profound believer in following up his luck, and his luck has been entirely in the DEMOCRATIC party.

Tomorrow They'll Burn Hurley Home

Yesterday All the Picture Men Did at Salem Was to Rob Custom a la Wild West.

Salem suffered another attack of the "movies" yesterday, making the second one in four days. This latest one was a wild West robbery of the Custom House, followed by capture of the robbers by the police.

Tomorrow they burn Mayor John F. Hurley's house. The Mayor and his silk hat make several rescues, then are saved in turn.

Life in Salem now is getting to be "one movie after another."

The Salemites watch both ways now, from the moment they leave their homes after breakfast.

For the "movie" stunts are sprung so unexpectedly and with such realism that innocent bystanders are startled.

Wednesday they staged a pickpocket capture and the "movie" pickpocket and "movie" policeman were battling finely in the street. Suddenly a bank cashier, who wasn't "in the know," as they say, jumped in and was threshing the stage pickpocket soundly when he was pulled off.

The Custom House hold-up yesterday scared other citizens. Two mounted men and a mounted woman dashed down the business streets, shooting right and left. They held up a Custom House force and rifled the safe. The riot call was sounded on the fire alarm. The police poured out. The general public darted hither and thither.

When they put on a "movie" fire at the Mayor's house tomorrow morning more unsuspecting citizens may get alarmed.

TOILER FINDS $4,000 IN GEMS

Surprising Discovery of Lost Loot in Steel Company's Junk Pile.

MONESSEN, Pa., April 26.—Fifteen large diamonds, valued at $4,000, were found in an old dirty tin tube in the scrap heap of old iron and refuse at the Pittsburgh Steel Company's plant here by an alien laborer. He was sorting through the junk pile when he noticed the tin tube. Attracted by its peculiar shape and appearance, he investigated.

The diamonds are pronounced by a local jeweller to be of the first water and worth fully $1,000, and the tube gave evidence of having been carefully arranged so as to prevent damage to the stones. The diamonds reposed in soft plush and cotton, and were in splendid condition.

WAS BORN IN NO COUNTRY.

MUNCIE, Ind., April 26.—When Mrs. Carrie Morris appeared in the County Clerk's office with George Nidy and applied for a marriage license, she was asked to give the country of her nativity. "No country at all," she replied. "I was born on the Atlantic Ocean. That's all I know about it."

HARVARD DIDN'T OUST EASTMAN

Professor, Here in Grogan Suit, Says He Was Not Asked to Resign by President Lowell.

Professor Charles R. Eastman of the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburgh, who, with his wife, is being sued by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Grogan of Cambridge, denies that he was asked to resign from the faculty at Harvard because of the notoriety given the Eastman-Grogan family feud, as charged by Mrs. Grogan.

"It is not true that President Lowell asked me to resign because of these family matters," said Professor Eastman. "I do not care to say why I left Harvard to go to the Carnegie Institute. I cannot discuss family affairs while Mrs. Grogan's suit is pending."

Professor Eastman declined to comment on the bill in equity filed against him by Mrs. Grogan in the East Cambridge court in which she seeks to recover the Rumford gold medal presented to her grandfather, Alvan Clarke. She claims Professor Eastman is withholding this medal from her.

Seeks Rumford Replica.

She also seeks to recover a silver replica of the Rumford medal and a pawn ticket for a $500 diamond ring which she complained the Eastmans are keeping from her wrongfully.

"These matters will all be threshed out in court at East Cambridge in due time," added the professor, "and it would not be proper for me to discuss them beforehand."

Mrs. Grogan is the widow of Richard H. Grogan, Jr., who was shot twelve years ago. Professor Eastman was tried on the charge of murdering Grogan and was acquitted. He was professor in the zoological department at Harvard at the time.

Grogan's widow now seeks an accounting of her father's estate and $15,000, which she claims is her rightful share. Professor Eastman and his wife, who is Mrs. Grogan's sister, have cared for the property. Mrs. Grogan's father was Alvan T. Clarke, a maker of lenses and telescopes.

Mrs. Grogan complains that she hasn't been getting her share of the estate. Her counsel, Attorney Hugh D. McClellan, laid stress in his cross-examination of Professor Eastman on a $600 check which Mrs. Grogan made out to the professor, to illustrate the professor's alleged attitude.

Lack of Responsibility.

Professor Eastman testified that Mrs. Grogan had "no sense of responsibility and couldn't be bound by anything overnight."

Professor Eastman said he felt that Mrs. Grogan needed the protection of his wife and himself, but that when the proposition to place her under their guardianship was made she protested indignantly. He felt that it was for her best interests.

Americans Must Stop Cringing to Japanese

(Editorial from the Washington Post, Saturday, April 26.)

Self-respecting Americans are beginning to call a halt on the tendency to truckle to Japan on the immigration and land questions. They are anxious to grant to the Japanese all their treaty rights but they are not willing to see State and National governments hemming and hawing and apologizing for exercising American rights. The reports of Japanese mobs denouncing Americans, the touchiness of Japan whenever these questions come up and the vague allusions to "dire consequences" are becoming decidedly tiresome.

California not only has an inherent right to control the ownership of lands within her borders but she has a duty to perform in maintaining American civilization on the Coast. No treaty is valid which attempts o deprive a State of the right to exclude aliens from land ownership. Several States have laws which prohibit the ownership of land by aliens. Our treaties with Austria Hungary, Bolivia, Brazil, France and several other governments acknowledge the right of the States to exclude aliens from the ownership of land. Congress itself has enacted a law which prohibits aliens from owning lands in the District of Columbia but preserving, of course, their treaty rights.

If Americans were crowding into Japan and acquiring lands to the inconvenience and discomfort of the natives, Japan would be acting within her rights and her duty by putting a stop to it.

As a matter of fact, Americans are not now permitted to own land in Japan except within certain districts and under restrictions which are purposely burdensome.

The United States does not object to Japan regulating her own affairs even when by such regulation, Americans are excluded. Japan must concede the same right to this country.

Americans are not greatly impressed by the argument that Japanese "honor" and "self-respect" are involved in the California land legislation. No decent Americans question the honor of self-respect of the Japanese. It is only when they insist upon entering the United States and buying up lands, intruding among a people where they are not wanted that they become offensive. They would be as undesirable in New Jersey or Georgia as they are in California. The people of the Pacific Coast are not laboring under any delusion or prejudice when they take steps to preserve California for the white race.

It is the duty of the United States to support California in any moderate but effective legislation that will accomplish this end without infringing upon the treaty with Japan. Talk of reprisal and war is silly. The elevation of Admiral Togo to be the Admiral of the Fleet may be a mere coincidence or it may be intended as an impressive hint. In either event, it is without bearing upon a situation that is wholly within the hands of Americans charged with the duty of safeguarding their own land for themselves and their posterity.

Let there be an end to over eager cringing to Japan. Let Americans in California and in Washington do their plain duty, without bluster and without weakness. Then if Japan should be so insane as to regard it as a cause of war, there will be another chapter in which Americans need have no fear that they cannot take care of themselves and their country.

JAP CONTROVERSY AROUSES NATION

Parsimonious Naval Policy Real Menace to Peace With World.

peared in the Official Gazette of the Japanese government April 3, 1910. This publication is described as being similar to our Congressional Record, being a record of all proposed bills whether or not they are enacted into law.

Those who have made an analysis of the contentions upon which the controversy is based, claim further, that Japan has gained largely by the treaty of 1911. This agreement does not stipulate a revocation of any prior laws, although Article 2 of the Japanese law of 1910 expressly excludes foreigners and foreign corporations from the island possessions and districts necessary for national defence.

It is also pointed out that the law of 1910 makes the minister of home affairs the sole judge of who shall have the privileges similar to those for which they are now contending in California.

JAPANESE CRISIS MUST AWAKEN U. S. TO NAVY'S WEAKNESS

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Whatever the outcome of this flurry with Japan it cannot fail to have one most salutary effect.

It must at last awaken the people of our whole country to the real facts concerning the navy of the United States.

The fact must become known of our insufficiency in battleships to protect our western and eastern shores against a powerful invading enemy and the other fact of the astonishing and alarming inadequacy of the ships we have in service.

It has developed now, out of rumor into actual certainty that in all that magnificent array of fighting vessels that lined the North River in New York last October, there was scarcely one of them really prepared to go to sea in defense of the country.

This is absolutely true upon the authority of naval experts, admirals, engineers and commanders, gathered here in Washington.

Every belching battleship in the North River was some 200 to 800 short in men and from four to nine short of officers to command.

Sad Lack of Men and Officers.

The splendid Utah and the magnificent Wyoming, if they had been moved from New York to meet an enemy, must have gone fatally handicapped by this lack, and the lesser warships in proportion. Said a brilliant commander:

The lack of men—enlisted men—for the navy is due to the fact that the navy has not kept faith with its enlisted men.

As bad, or worse than this, is our navy's condition for coal and other fuel. Experts of the navy declare that there should be 500,000 tons of coal stored on the Pacific stations for naval use. There are not 250,000 tons on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards combined.

There should e 200,000 tons of coal a month prepared for the navy. There is not now more than 80,000 tons stored in advance of one month's supply.

I will give you these facts for information, but the man who publishes them at this time ought to be shot.

Said a rear admiral, standing by: "The man who has this information and does not publish it now ought to be shot."

Don't you suppose that the astute and tireless spies that are forever on the lookout for Japan in this country know all of this?

Why, we know this much of Japan's navy. Do you think they do not know the number of men on every battleship and the tons of coal in our bunkers?

Depend on it that Japan knows all, and that Japan's knowledge of this is the basis of Japan's aggressiveness toward our neglected navy.

Why, for four hundred years England has never been attacked b ya foreign kower.

England has attacked other nations at her will. Her militant fleet has sailed within the century up the Potomac River and burned our own capital in Washington to ashes.

But no nation on earth within that time has ever attacked the greatest navy in the world.

Best Insurance Policy.

The English army has been the mightiest insurance policy, the mightiest peacemaker, the mightiest lifesaver, the mightiest property protector in all history.

Why should not the United States have such an asset?

Is our country never to learn this lesson in safety, economy and peace? Is the narrowness and parsimony of Congress and the unwisdom of administrations to deny to this great, rich country the only possible immunity against war?

Ten years ago the Oregon was the greatest battleship in the world. Today the Utah could whip twenty Oregons. The Wyoming's fighting strength is more than twenty Oregons.

It is no longer a matter of sensation or alarm to advocate a greater navy. Facts at hand make it a necessity.

We shall probably not have war with Japan. Japan's poverty and debt may hold that nation now. But Japan will not always be poor and in debt. Japan will always be proud and sensitive and confident.

Problem Not Alone for Today.

And our race problem on the Pacific coast is not for today or tomorrow, but for all time.

Let us meet our necessities and our national dangers and our national duties in the spirit of common sense and statesmanship—as England does.

CLUB HOLDS BANQUET.

Members of the Maple Leaf Club of Boston held their first annual meeting and banquet at the Crawford House last night. J. Schute was toastmaster and about twenty were present. Informal speeches followed the dinner. In charge were George Johnson and Otto Richardt.

Pave Blanchard's Way to Treasurer

Republicans Have Sceme for Stevens to Retire that Legislature May Fill Vacancy.

Things are being done at the State House, it was said yesterday, to make State Senator Charles V. Blanchard of Somerville the State Treasurer, by act of his associates in the Legislature, and have Blanchard in the place next Fall in order that Republicans may, in the ordinary course of events, give him the nomination.

State Treasurer Elmer A. Stevens of Somerville is serving his fifth year. The Constitution provides that no man may be Treasurer of the Commonwealth longer than that.

So, the story goes, Stevens is going to a responsible place with a trust company and Blanchard will be shoved into his place by vote of the Legislature.

State Treasurer Arthur B. Chapin, having served nearly five years, resigned in like manner to become vice president of the American Trust Company. Stevens, then a State Senator from Somerville, was elected by his associates in the Legislature. The present plan is to do the same thing over again and the Senate, it is reported, is already lined up for Blanchard.

Quincy Boys Sail on Trip to Europe

J. Stuart and Fred A. Baird Leave on Canopic with Father for First Voyage Abroad.

Among the first class passengers who sailed yesterday on the Canopic were two very happy boys from Quincy.

They were J. Stuart Baird and Fred A. Baird, sons of A. F. Baird of Quincy, who holds an important position with a great mercantile firm of New York.

Mr. Baird goes to Europe frequently for his house. This year he has taken along with him his two sons as traveling companions.

It is the boys' first voyage to the Old World and naturally they were in the highest spirits yesterday as they received the farewells of a large number of friends of themselves and their father.

Their tour will include visits to the Azores, Gibraltar, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, Venice, Trieste, Hamburg, Berlin, Paris and London.

Father and sons will be away sixteen weeks.

PAN-ALBANIAN MEETING.

To take action to defend their native land which is endangered by the Balkan Allies, members of the Pan-Albanian Federation of America will come to Boston from all sections of the country next Sunday. A mass meeting will be held in Laurence Hall, No. 724 Washington street.

RAILROADS RAISE WAGES FOR 3,000

Telegraphers, Station Agents, Towermen of Two Mellen Lines Get Increase.

Three thousand telegraphers, station agents or towermen employed by the New Haven, the Boston & Maine and the South Station teminal are given from six to twelve per cent. higher wages under agreements completed by the officers of their union late yesterday afternoon.

This removes all danger of a general strike among the railroad telegraphers, the agreements already having been signed. It also disposes of the entire question of wage and working betterments for this class of employes on all but the Boston & Albany road, and a few Boston Elevated telegraphers. These roads are expected to grant similar concessions within a few days.

Minimum of $60.

Under the agreements reached, a minimum of $60 a month is established. The wage rates vary, according to the responsibility of positions, ranging from $60 to $130 a month. But all are included in the increase, and in many instances substantial working condition betterments also are given the men.

T. M. Pierson of St. Louis, international vice-president of the union, headed the men's committee, and the last of the agreements was signed with H. J. Horn, vice-president of the Boston & Maine, which automatically made permanent provisional agreements previously reached with the other two managements. Had the Boston & Maine not signed, these tentative agreements would have been declared off, with the possibility of a strike following.

Railroads Fair, Says Pierson.

"This shows the benefits of trade unionism," said Vice-President Pierson last night. "Without the necessity of calling a strike, and with harmony prevailing between the management and the men at all stages of the proceedings, we have secured substantial betterments by reason of collective bargaining.

"The officers of the different roads have been fair throughout. Our requests for conferences always met with a prompt response. We won as an organized force, and made no unnecessary enemies in the winning."

Fiancee to Wait Explorer's Return

School Teacher Says "Yes" to Scientist Who Goes to Arctic with MacMillan Party.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., April 26.—Most American girls would refuse an engagement lasting three years. If they knew that in all that time they would never see the man of their choice, would never receive a message or a letter, and, indeed, would not know if he was alive or dead, they could hardly be blamed for saying "no."

Miss Augusta May Krieger of Peoria, young graduate of the University of Illinois, principal of the high school at Highland Park, Ill., did not say "no." That is why her engagement to W. Elmer Ekblaw, University of Illinois scientist, has been announced.

Ekblaw will depart in June as a member of the MacMillan Arctic expedition for a dangerous journey to the greatest unexplored region in the Arctic circle. Crocker Land, a territory half a million miles square, is the goal of the explorers. Three years is the time allotted.

TO END JEALOUSY IN ARMY AND NAVY

WASHINGTON, April 26.—No two have harder positions to fill than the officials who hold the portfolios of war and navy.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels and Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison have fallen heir not only to all the routine business of their departments but to the score of petty prejudices and dislikes which have existed in the army and navy from time immemorial.

In the navy, for instance, there always is the feeling that the officer who occupies a "desk job" at Washington is liable to get more credit than his brother officer in command of a ship at sea. The officer who is near the secretary is liable to develop more influence than the commander who is away from the seat of government.

CARDINAL SAILS ON VISIT TO ROME

Boston Prince of Church Goes on Canopic to See Pope Pius.

Amid the blowing of whistles and the hearty farewells of hundreds of persons, the White Star Liner Canopic pulled away from her dock in Charlestown yesterday afternoon on her voyage to Naples via the Azores and Gibraltar.

On board were Cardinal O'Connell and Rt. Rev. Monsignor Splaine, rector of the Cathedral of the Holy Cross. The cardinal is on his way to Rome to pay his annual visit to Pope Pius X. Besides Dr. Splaine, he is accompanied by Dr. J. R. Slattery of the staff of St. Elizabeth Hospital.

Denies Special Significance.

Many distinguished citizens were on board at sailing time to say farewell to the cardinal and his stateroom was filled with handsome floral tributes.

To a reporter for the Sunday AMERICAN Cardinal O'Connell said there was no significance whatever connected with his going abroad. His trip was mainly to give personal supervision to the work being done in his titular church of St. Clement, and also to take part in the jubilee in honor of the edict of Milan.

Site Selected for Medford City Hall

Mayor Holds Option on Property at High Street and Gouvernor's Avenue.

After conferences with all of the civic societies of Medford, Mayor Taylor has decided to recommend to the City Government the purchase of the lot at the junction of High street and Gouvernor's avenue, near Medford square, as a location for the new City Hall.

The lot contains 35,000 square feet of land and three dwelling houses, assessed for $48,000, and the Mayor holds an option on the property for its assessed value. The buildings will be removed. Mayor Taylor also will ask for immediate action upon the bond issue of $200,000 authorised by the Legislature for the work. It is proposed to erect a building costing $150,000.

TEXTILE STUDENTS DINE.

About thirty-five attended the meeting and dinner of the Gamma Chapter, Phi Psi fraternity of the Lowell Textile School, at the American House last night. The toastmaster was Ernest C. Hay. Speeches followed Ada Herring, on Slab for Seniors, Had Great Control and Mowed Down Junior Batswomen.

We really believe that Tom McNamara, who draws pictures of the ways "Us Boys" play the national game, is the man The Editor ought to have set to do this story.

But he's chucked the job off on us. So here goes.

The Wellesley 1913 baseball team beat the 1914 team, 17 to 5, yesterday afternoon. Five hundred fans in everything from hobble skirts or "middie blouses" to "gym bloomers," cheered the sharp fielding of the seniors, or encouraged the juniors to start a batting rally and break up the game.

There's no use trying to describe that game. We interviewed the captains of both teams and all the members, and all 500 of the fans at the same time, and this—as near as we could get it—was what they said:

"We won"—"we won"—"we—"Got a pin?"—your braid's coming loose"—"wasn't that a peach of a slam that"—"seventeen to five"—"isn't it glorious?"—"Baseball's just wonderful!" "Don't YOU think so?"—"Well, I couldn't help missing it, I stubbed my toe"—"Isn't Gladys some pitcher though, girls?"—"I'm just crazy for the next game"—"Now don't make fun of us, will you?"

'Twas a Great Game.

We shouted that we wouldn't, and made a flying leap for a passing car.

It was a wonderful game. Ada Herring, on the slab for the seniors, pitched air-tight ball except for two innings. But Gladys Gorman, with miserable support to discourage her, couldn't seem to control her fast 'hop' ball, and was hit hard throughout the game. The fourth inning saw the downfall of the juniors, for the seniors corralled eight runs—enough to win, in that one session.

The juniors scored three runs in the first inning and took the lead, the seniors getting only one. The neither side scored till the fourth. After that fatal session the seniors scored at will. In the sixth Pitcher Herring weakened, and an error behind her allowed two scores.

But after it was all over there wasn't a fan in the lot but what was ready to cheer both teams as the best ever. Gladys Gorman, Catherine Schmidt, Marjorie Menamin, Elizabeth McConaugy, Ada Herring, Josephine Guion, Stella Ream, Elizabeth Brown and Marjorie Cowee were voted the privilege of wearing the college "W" on their sweaters. They were the stars of the game.

We tried to keep a box score and got along just fair—that's all—just fair. It was confusing. We lost track of everything but the summary. Here it is, but we don't vouch for it.

The Way They Lined Up.

The two teams:

1913—Gladys Smith, Elizabeth Brown, Stella Ream (captain), Josephine Guion (catcher), Helen Ryan, Helen Logan, Ada Herring, Janet Moore, Marjorie Cowee, Gladys Cole.

1914—Ida Appenzeller, Elizabeth McConaughy, Marjorie Menamin (captain), Frances Robinson, Marporie Boynton, Dorothea Havens, Helena Stewart, Henrietta Gilmore, Catherine Schmidt (catcher), Gladys Gorman (pitcher), Marjorie Day.

The Summary:

Home runs—5. Three-base hits—4. Two-base hits—6. Base hits—About 27. Stolen bases—Several. Passed balls—Most of them. Lost hair pins—197. Shoe strings untied—46. Squeals—1,976,540. Screams—More than that. Hit by batted balls—33. Hit by pitched ball—None. (They had time to dodge.)

Score by innings:

1913	1	0	0	8	1	4	0	2	1—17

NEWTON WOMAN DIES.

MIDDLEBORO, April 26.—Miss Catherine Dalton of Newton died at Lakeville today, where she was receiving treatment for tuberculosis. The body has been sent to Newton.

POET NOYES CALLS HUB BEST OF ALL

Alfred Noyes, whom many consider the greatest living poet, has returned to Boston, and he declares after a journey in which he saw New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and the majority of the leading cities of this country, that Boston is the best city of them all.

Here are Mr. Noyes' impressions of Boston as expressed in an interview with the Sunday AMERICAN:

I have had the happiest time of my life in Boston. While I've travelled West and South, I must say that I like Boston best.

There is something about Boston that you do not find in Western cities. I have noticed a desire to know things and persons in Boston. Bostonians are willing to hear everything new along intellectual lines.

If a new religious teacher, for instance, is coming to Boston, why you want to hear what he has to say. This is noticeable in many ways in your city. Boston people are appreciative of intellectual results.

If they do not believe in certain forms of teaching, they are willing to hear something about them.

It's an old saying about Boston that it is a state of mind. This partly covers the truth. Your history is always interesting to a visitor. So much has happened here that is connected with the beginning of this great republic of America.

Then I find a warm reception awaits one here who loves poetry.

New York and Chicago are busy centres of trade. The vast throngs you see there on the streets impress you that business is the first and absorbing interest.

You don't find that so in Boston. There are so many circles here, literary circles, within a short compass of this city, which make one feel that Boston is truly a literary centre. That reputation Boston will not lose. Other cities are literary, but Boston peculiarly so.

I am going back to England on May 7 and will return to this country in the Fall, about October.

About American women? Well, now, that's a delicate question to handle. If I am to draw my conclusions from Boston women, I should say that the average woman is more cosmopolitan than the average English woman. You know, of course, this does not apply to the London women, where they are so cosmopolitan.

But as I have gone around I have been struck with the way that the women get interested in so many projects. The women of Boston are certainly interested in many civic movements. They are engaged in studying many questions bearing upon economic and social questions.

Now we have two types of women in England. Probably you have known of our Mrs. Pankhurst. Well! she is of a species that only England can produce. Boston women can get their rights in a different way, it may be. But this is a matter that will soon adjust itself in England.

YOU NEED A TONIC

Pe-ru-na is One of the Original Spring Tonics of This Country. It has Stood the Test of Time.

Mrs. Martha Avery

In all countries where the four seasons are well defined, winter, spring, summer, autumn, most people find themselves in the spring of the year in need of a spring tonic. Some medical men laugh at this idea. Nevertheless it is a fact, based on the experience of millions of people every spring. The common experience of mankind cannot be "laughed out of court." A spring tonic is demanded.

The crisp, stimulating air of winter has given place to the langorous, enervating, soporific influences of spring atmosphere. A spring tonic is needed. No better one can be selected than Peruna.

The symptoms which indicate the need of a spring tonic are: First, sleep poorly. Second, always tired out. Third, very nervous. Fourth, sometimes have foolish fears. Fifth, confusion of the senses. Sixth, brown moving specks before the eyes. Seventh, subject to spells of prostration. Eighth, dark circles around the eyes. Ninth, system out of order generally. Tenth, food seems to give no strength.

One of the people who writes us of his experience with spring tonics is Mr. J. O. Doggett, of Piedmont, South Carolina, P. O. Box 88. He says: "I have tried many kinds of medicine that claim to do wonders as a spring tonic. None of them equals Peruna. I took Peruna first to please a friend. I had no faith in it, but I was soon convinced. Peruna is the best medicine on the market for the relief of all catarrhal diseases."

Mr. B. S. Irvin, Mayor of Washington, Ga., says that he uses Peruna in his family as a tonic and he often recommends it to his friends. He also says that as a remedy for colds and catarrhal diseases and as a tonic he regards it as superior to all other remedies.

Mr. Jay G. Hicks, Autaugaville, Alabama, says: "I have used Peruna and consider it one of the greatest tonics known."

Then there is Mr. C. N. Peterson, of No. 132 South Main St., Council Bluffs, Iowa. He says that constant confinement to his store caused his health to gradually break down. He was in need of a tonic. He took Peruna and five bottles restored him to complete health.

Mrs. Martha Avery, No. 28 Graham St., Leominster, Massachusets, whose portrait appears in this article, is a great friend of Peruna. She writes: "Four years ago I had nervous prostration. I employed several doctors. One would say I had catarrh of the stomach and bowels, another nervousness and another enlargement of the liver. My stomach was in a bad shape. There was nothing which seemed to do me much good. I tried other remedies, but did not gain any flesh until I commenced taking your Peruna, which built me right up. I have taken several bottles, but have not taken any now for about six weeks. I am seventy-three years old. I never expect to be entirely well or young again, but I am thankful for what Peruna has done for me."

TUFTS PLANS FOR BIG JUNIOR WEEK

Athletic Contests and Ibsen Play to Be Features of College Celebration.

The combined Junior classes of Tufts and Jackson Colleges are preparing for Junior Week. In former years the annual festivities of the junior class was confined to one day. While the events will extend over a week, the college exercises will be suspended on but one day, known as Junior Day.

The festivities will commence on Monday, May 11, with a baseball game against Holy Cross on the Oval. On the following day the Brown and Blue will oppose Dartmouth. Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Goddard Gymnasium the Junior Prom will be held. Thursday will be the big day, when a series of events will continue through the day. Carroll C. O'Neill of Allston, the junior class president, will open the day with a flag raising at 8:30 a. m.

At 9 o'clock the final interclass track meet will take place on the athletic field. While this is in progress there will be a "Horribles" parade. The parade will be in charge of the Sword and Shield, the honorary sophomore society.

Immediately after the track meet there will be a tennis match between Tufts and Brown. A farce game of baseball will then be played between the Tufts Glee and Mandolin Clubs. The players will appear in full dress. Henry B. Stryker of Cambridge will lead the Glee Club and E. Lester Marshall of Lynn will captain the Mandolin Club.

At 1:30 o'clock dinner will be served by the various fraternities in the different chapter houses. On the athletic field at 3 o'clock the varsity baseball team will play Syracuse. After the game and until 6 o'clock the visitors will be given an opportunity to promenade the campus and see the buildings and sights. From 6 o'clock until 7:30 the junior spread will be given in the Goddard Gymnasium.

KEEPS PROMISE MADE TO FATHER

Young Man Weds His Stepmother and Then Is Placed Under Arrest.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 26.—"Take this woman to be your wife," or words to that effect, was the injunction given by Daniel Goucher, a herb doctor, to his son Gecovis two months ago, when the father died. The woman referred to was the wife of Daniel Goucher, stepmother to Gecovis. The father thought his son would take care of his widow in this way, and in order to seal the pledge took the ring from his finger and placed it on the finger of the son.

Gecovis was a dutiful son, and March 15 he and his stepmother were married. All went well until a few days ago, when the wife-stepmother alleged her husband became rough. She had him arrested, the couple were in the police court and after hearing the story the judge gave them until Thursday afternoon to fix up their troubles.

With Mrs. Goucher was her six-year-old daughter, who is the half-sister and stepdaughter of Gecovis.

AN ACCIDENTAL BIGAMIST.

Foreigner Hears Wife Is Dead and Marries Again.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 26.—Living with his second wife and their six-months-old child, while his first wife and their boy of six, who had travelled from Russia to find them, were being cared for by charity, David Manderjeska, an accidental bigamist, is waiting the decision of Police Judge Collins as to which wife he was to accept finally.

"I love both women and I love my children," pleaded the man, "but I can't decide what to do. I am telling you what is in my mind, and please judge, decide for me, what I am to do."

Judge Collins made no findings in the case pending an investigation. Manderjeska married a second time when he believed his first wife dead.

PALMIST'S DIVORCED WIFE TO FIGHT FOR FORTUNE SUICIDE LEFT TO FRIEND

Woman the "Seer" Left Through Dakota Courts to Challenge Decree and Contest Will.

Palmist John W. Fletcher's divorced wife, whose very existence had been forgotten by all save the most intimate friends of the great palmist-suicide, will be the chief contestant of the strange will Fletcher left.

The AMERICAN is able to state this fact exclusively today as a result of a searching investigation of Fletcher's life history.

Fletcher's wife was divorced thirteen years ago in South Dakota. Fletcher's family had opposed the marriage. The woman was a medium, and served a year in an English prison on a charge of having fraudulently secured the jewels of an unnamed lady of the English nobility.

After this disgrace, Fletcher's family never spoke of his former wife, and the result was that only their most intimate friends knew of this strange secret of the man's life.

Mrs. Fletcher, the AMERICAN learned, has already taken steps to fight the will. She has written to old friends who remember her married life with Fletcher, and through her son, Albert Willis, has already begun to gather evidence for her legal fight for the dead palmist's fortune.

Servant Gives First Clew.

The AMERICAN'S reporters happened on the story of Fletcher's married life, in their investigation of the palmist's spectacular career. It was a former servant of the Fletcher family who gave the first clew.

Fletcher's wife was last heard from in Greenwich, Ct., where she was known as Dr. Susan Fletcher Webster. She was a medium, claiming supernatural powers of the sort Fletcher practiced. As soon as she heard of Fletcher's death and learned that he had left practically his entire fortune to a casual friend, Cameron A. Patchin of New York, she is believed to have set her friends to work and begun her fight.

The contest of the will will be based first on the claim that Fletcher's divorce was not a valid one. The divorce was granted by a South Dakota court about 1900.

Challenge Testator's Sanity.

Another argument against the will which has been filed will be that Fletcher either later made another will, or that he was insane when this one was made. For in the present will he leaves sums of money to two people who are dead, and who he knew were dead.

The contestants will argue either that he must have made another will, to correct this mistake, or that when he allowed this will to stand, his mind had become unsettled by his study of spiritualism, and the "other world" had become such a reality to him that he imagined he could transmit his material goods to denizens of the "other world."

There will be many contestants of the palmist's will. His uncle, Frank Fletcher of No. 354 Highland avenue, Somerville, and his two cousins, Mrs. George Clark and Hugh Francis Fletcher, will be among these contestants.

But the divorced wife will make the strongest fight of all.

This divorced wife was, before her marriage to the palmist, Mrs. Augusta S. Willis. Her maiden name was Webster. She had been divorced once before she and Fletcher met. He was twenty, and she about thirty, when, on the occasion of one of his lectures on spiritualism delivered at Onset, Mrs. Willis sought an occasion to meet him.

Maid Tells of Mrs. Fletcher.

It was his skill as a medium that attracted her. They worked together for a time and the story of their marriage, and the subsequent divorce, was told to an AMERICAN reporter by Miss Mary Hyde of Montague, a woman who was employed by Marcellus Fletcher, the palmist's father, as a maid, and who was in the family for years.

She said:

Fletcher's mother was nearly killed by his marriage to Mrs. Willis. Mrs. Willis, who was Miss Augusta S. Webster, a Lawrence girl, before her first marriage, had been divorced from her first husband. Then, too, she was ten or twelve years older than Fletcher. Fletcher was always "Willie" to me, for I knew him when he was just a boy.

Willie was just sixty-two years and six months old. He was born October 27, 1851, in Westford, near Lawrence. His cousin, Mrs. Ann Coolidge, still lives in the old Fletcher house.

Willie was married when he was twenty-one years old, in Lawrence. After the ceremony they had a wedding dinner in Westford.

Soon after the marriage, Willie and his wife went to Europe. They had been mediums together and had made a great success.

When they were in London Mrs. Fletcher did something that made it necessary for them to return at once. They came up here to Lake Pleasant, the Spiritualist camp meeting grounds.

Arrested for Theft.

Willie and "Susie Willis Fletcher," as his wife called herself, had a cottage on the camp meeting grounds. English detectives appeared and placed Mrs. Fletcher under arrest. They said she had stolen the jewels belonging to some Duchess or somebody, in England. They were very secret about it, for fear of bringing notoriety upon the Englishwoman.

Frank, the Somerville uncle, at once offered to go bondsman for Mrs. Fletcher—but something happened, and Frank felt insulted and never spoke to Willie again.

Somehow the detectives induced Mrs. Fletcher to go back to London with them without a contest. She took a different ship from the one she was expected to go on. But they had cabled ahead, and had her arrested at the wharf.

She afterward published a book entitled "Twelve Months in an English Prison." The trouble broke Willie's mother all up.

Willie used to say she had hypnotized him. Either just before the divorce or just after the divorce, Willie told me that she had run away with a New York man, a publisher of some sort.

'She has hyptonized him, too," he told me. "Wait till he wakes up to what she has done to him, and he will find life as bitter as I have."

"Do you think she has that power to hypnotize a man?" I asked.

"I certainly ought to be the one to know," he answered. "I ought to know I was under her power myself."

Feared Divorce Was Not Legal.

It was about thirteen years ago that Willie told me about his divorce. He said he had divorced her in South Dakota. He was worried for fear that it might not be a binding divorce.

"My lawyer assured me that the divorce will stand," he said at that time, "but I do not know. I will never be sure that she will not set to work to have it set aside, perhaps even after my death.'

I last heard of Mrs. Susie Willis Fletcher from Greenwich, Ct. After the divorce she attended some medical school or college in Boston. I do not think she ever practised medicine, though. She took the name of Dr. Susan Fletcher Webster.

Now, I always did believe in Willie. He was a wonderful, medium. I remember there was one man, a manufacturer of Passaic, New Jersey, I think it was. He had been a regular patron at Willie's in New York. Every time he came, after the regular reading, Willie used to tell him, "Beware of the boiler in your factory. There is something the matter with it, I know not what, but watch it."

This Time Rector Is 'Waiting at Church'

Rev. Dr. Kidner, Assistant Rector at Church, Waits Until Midnight for Bridegroom Who Appears Not.

The Rev. Dr. Reuben Kidner, assistant rector of Trinity Church, had the strangest vigil of his career last night. Up till midnight he remained on the watch for a would-be bridegroom who came not. It was similar to the case of "waiting at the church" in the popular song, only in this instance it was the minister and not the bride who did the waiting.

Last Wednesday eRv. Dr. Kidner re-
Last Wednesday the Rev. Dr. Kidner received a telephone message from a man giving his name as "Sturgis" and asking if the clergyman would marry him last night at midnight. The minister said he would. But at midnight "Sturgis" hadn't shown up and the Rev. Dr. Kidner hadn't heard a word from him.

"This is the most peculiar experience I ever had," said the clergyman "But it is the duty of a clergyman to meet all the exigencies of life, and I would gladly remain up all night to perform a marriage if it were necessary."

MOTORCYCLE INJURES FOOT.

Rider on Rear Seat Gets it Tangled With Wheel.

ONSET BAY, April 26.—While riding on the rear seat of a motorcycle this afternoon, William Gilespie of Taunton got his foot caught between the frame of the machine and the spokes of the wheel, lacerating it. The spokes of the wheel were removed to get the foot out. Fred Tweedy of Taunton was operating the machine. The men came down to look at the canal.

MILITANTS FIRE TRAIN AND FLEE

Arson Outrages Upon Railroad Interests Resumed by Suffragettes.

LONDON, April 26. — "Arsonettes" from the Women's Social and Political Union resumed their attacks on the railroad interests today. A stationary train on the tracks of the Midland Railway was found to be afire near Eddington station, Middlesex, by employes of the station and before the blaze could be extinguished three compartments of one of the cars had been burned out.

A woman's cloak was found in one of the cars showing that the incendiaries had made a hasty departure. Near the cloak was a quantity of suffrage literature. Cards addressed to various members of Parliament bore such inscriptions as "England gets no peace until we get our rights."

Oil had been poured over the interiors of all three cars of the train, but the women had evidently been frightened off.

Althought the police made a diligent search they did not get a glimpse of the incendiaries and made no arrests.

Other members of the arson squad attempted to burn the grandstand at the famous Preston football field in the North End, but were driven away by the police. The women left behind them several suit cases filled with oil-soaked cotton and oakum waste, several gallons of petroleum and patent fire lighters, with a great quantity of time fuses. The store shed of the railway station at Huntington was burned during the night.

SAY GERMANY IS TO AID AUSTRIA

Will Support Her Demands Upon Montenegro for Scutari's Evacuation, Vienna Hears.

VIENNA, April 26.—Germany has decided to stand by Austria in pressing her demands for an autonomous Albania, according to a report current here tonight. This was learned following a conference between the Emperor and the foreign minister of war at Schoenbrunn this evening.

It was announced that Austria will wait until Monday for the powers to take some decisive action in regard to taking Scutari from Montenegro. Should the powers delay further in agreeing upon a united plan of action, Austria-Hungary will proceed either alone or in alliance with Italy and Germany, or both, to "vindicate her political and military prestige."

CETTINJE, Montenegro, April 26.—King Nicholas of Montenegro, accompanied by Crown Prince Danilo, officers of the staff and members of the Montenegrin government, entered Scutari in state today. Montenegrin troops lined the roadways and cheers rolled along the line as the plucky monarch rode by. Nicholas saluted his troops and answered their salutations with more familiarity than is generally shown by a victorious monarch.

Rides Five Miles Daily to School

Ably B. Brooks, Wellesley Girl, Is Teaching Youngsters in Far Away Wyoming.

Miss Abby B. Brooks of the Wellesley College class of 1912 is following up her athletic and educational pursuits in college by riding five miles daily to teach school, near Caspar, Wyo.

A bulletin of Miss Brooks' situation was published in the current issue of the Wellesley College News, which keeps tabs on graduate activities.

Miss Brooks is remembered at Wellesley as one of the star athletes, as well as a comely and charming girl.

She was popular, too, else she never would have been elected to the executive committee of the Wellesley College student government board. This is the undergraduate organization which administers many college affairs.

Miss Brooks was captain of the 1912 basketball team and won her "W" in that capacity.

Coming from the "V. V." ranch at Caspar, Wyo., she was used to outdoor, athletic life. She took up as much exercise at college as was consistent with her studies.

She picked up her college course with an eye to teaching when she should be graduated. The bulletin from Wyoming shows not only that she has a school, but she is back at her girlhood diversion of riding horseback.

The "V. V." ranch is two and one-half miles from Miss Brooks' school, so the young teacher gets a brisk gallop to and from her teaching duties.

NEW UPRISING IN MEXICO FEARED

Huerta Calls in Picked Troops to Hold Capital as Revolt Spreads.

MEXICO CITY, April 26.—Ominous signs developed today showing that President Huerta fears an open attack upon the government tonight or tomorrow. As the result of threats of a hostile demonstration by enemies of the government, Huerta today moved 500 troops into the capital from Xochimilco, in the federal district, and stationed the pick of them in the National Palace. Five machine guns have been mounted upon the roof of the National Palace and are being manned day and night.

Soldiers are patrolling the streets and Huerta has issued a proclamation appealing to Mexicans in the name of justice and good order to keep peaceful and give the government time to pacify the republic. It is obvious that Huerta is surrounding himself only with men of undoubted loyalty.

Garcia Granados, who resigned as minister of the interior, because of differences with Huerta, declared that he did not believe the present regime would last six weeks longer.

"The government is bankrupt," declared Granados. "I doubt if Huerta could raise $10,000 through the channels of the national treasury. Customs duties are being seized to pay the salaries of public officers, at the ports, and the ordinary revenues of the government are paralyzed.

This is your ticket to Easy Street

O'Sullivan's Heels make every street an easy street.

They give you the buoyant walk that always goes with energy and success in men, and with charm and beauty in women.

People who know how to take care of themselves wear O'Sullivan's Heels—people who have studied the art of getting there, who have learned that successful men and women never drag their feet or walk with drooping shoulders.

O'Sullivan's
Heels of New Live Rubber

Nature intended man for a barefoot life, and gave him the cushion of flesh that forms the human heel. Savages, using Nature's heels, never have broken arches of the feet, or backaches, or nervous exhaustion.

Civilization has defeated Nature's purpose by encasing our feet in shoes and making us walk on hard leather heels. Every step on hard heels and harder pavements sends a shock upward through the spine to the brain.

In time you begin to have backaches; you are tired and nervous at the end of a day's work; you cannot walk without fatigue; and you grow blue and pessimistic. All these conditions often result from hard leather heels.

O'Sullivan's Heels take you back to Nature. They restore to your feet the elastic cushions that Nature gave you.

O'Sullivanize your walk

Now, suppose you try it. That will be more convincing than all our advertising. Any shoemaker has O'Sullivan's Heels, and can attach them to your shoes in fifteen minutes. Cost—fifty cents.

Then get out in the fresh air, walk, and see how much better you feel.

MOOSERS WOULD OPPOSE STORROW

Leaders at Conference Consider Plans for City Campaign; Hale and Magenis Talked of.

If James J. Storrow is a candidate again for Mayor of Boston he will not have the support of the Bull Moose party.

This was determined at a meeting of ten of the most prominent leaders of the Bull Moose party held at the City Club during the week.

The meeting was for the purpose of discussing the mayoralty situation, and the name of the former candidate of the Citizens' Municipal League and the Good Government Association was brought into the discussion.

"We would not support Storrow for Mayor under any consideration. We couldn't support him any more than we could support John W. Weeks for United States Senator."

Such was the opinion of every Bull Mooser who attended the conference. There was a unanimity of opinion that the Progressive party should have a ticket in the field at the next mayoralty election.

Officials of the Bull Moose party denied that any notice of the result of the conference had been conveyed to Mr. Storrow. It was stated that from reliable sources word had been received that Mr. Storrow would not contest for the mayoralty again.

Developments indicate that the Bull Moose may have a complete municipal ticket in the field at the next election. Councilman Earnest E. Smith is one of the most active Bull Moosers, and it is generally understood that his candidacy for re-election to the City Council will have the support and endorsement of the Progressive party. Other candidates for the Council mentioned as scheduled for the Progressive tag are Ex-Councilman Frank A. Goodwin of East Boston, Ex-Councilman Charles E. Moore of Ward 11, and Colonel Thomas F. Doherty of Dorchester.

In the mayoralty contest it is generally understood that the Bull Moose support will be given to ex-Councilman Matthew Hale or to former School Committeeman James P. Magenis.

Rockefeller, Jr., to Issue Book on Vice

First of Series, with Introduction by Himself, Will Disclose Conditions in New York—Seek Remedies.

NEW YORK, April 26.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., whose civic duty as a grand juror investigating underworld conditions in this city inspired him to found the Bureau of Social Hygiene and to set aside a sum for the construction of a laboratory at the Bedford Reformatory, is sponsor for a series of publications that he believes will be instrumental in causing drastic changes in the statutes pertaining to the regulation of vice throughout the United States.

Mr. Rockefeller, it was learned today, will himself be the author of the introduction to the first of these books. Today the manuscript was turned over to the printer—the Century Company—and on May 15 the book will be issued. Its title is to be "Commercialized Prostitution in New York City," and it is to deal with all phases of the evil.

Working in conjunction with Mr. Rockefeller in the preparation of this series are several men and one woman.

Dr. Abraham Flexner is doing the editorial work and will write the second book, dealing with European conditions.

Eleanor Gordon Was Robbed in Swoon

Actress Playing Here Faints at Stage Door—Youth Pretending to Aid Her Steals Bag and $200.

Miss Eleanor Gordon, the leading woman in "Kismet," which closed a three weeks' run at the Hollis Street Theatre last night, has met a lot of stage villians in her career, but she never ran up against the real thing in villainy, according to her friends, until late last night. As Miss Gordon was leaving the stage entrance after the final performance, she fainted.

A score of bystanders rushed forward to assist her. Some DID assist her and the actress thanked them when she recovered consciousness. Then she discovered that her mesh bag, containing $200, was missing.

The police said a youth in the crowd had grabbed the mesh bag from her hand and escaped down the street. The police also said that the youth deserves the name of the "meanest man alive" for stealing the bag of a fainting woman whom he pretended to help.

WATSON TO LEAD FIGHT ON KENNY

Councillor Will Oppose Acting Mayor's Policy on Borrowing Street Fund.

Councillor James A. Watson will lead the fight in the City Council against the announced policy of President Thomas J. Kenny to borrow no money for new streets outside the debt limit.

Councillor Watson will have the backing of the Mayor, who is strongly of the opinion that the attitude of the Council president is against the letter and spirit of the so-called Horgan act which permitted the city to borrow $2,500,000 for new streets outside of the debt limit.

Strong pressure is being brought to bear upon the members of the City Council by officials of the improvement associations and residents of the suburban districts who are opposed to the policy of President Kenny.

President Kenny has the support of the Good Government Association and the Finance Commission in carrying through his announced financial policy. As he interprets the Horgan act it was merely a permissive act, authorizing the city to borrow $2,500,000 for new streets, but leaving it entirely discretionary with the City Council and the Mayor as to how this money should be borrowed.

The Mayor contends that the act specifically stated that the money should be borrowed outside of the debt limit and he feels that borrowing money for this purpose within the debt limit is contrary to the spirit and letter of the act.

As the matter stands there is an order in the City Council committee on finance providing for the borrowing of $500,000 within the debt limit to be expended for new streets. The Mayor feels that this money should be borrowed within the debt, but should be utilized for new buildings, playgrounds and other improvements for which there is an insistent demand. He wants the $500,000 for new streets borrowed outside of the debt limit.

A number of members of the Council support the Mayor in his contention, even though the body has gone on record as opposed to borrowing money outside the debt limit during the present year.

MISS SCHENCK A BRIDE.

Married to Hayden Channing in Villa at Berkshires.

LENOX, April 26.—A country villa prettily decorated with Spring flowers and high up on Richmond Mountain overlooking the surrounding Berkshire Hills was the setting for the wedding today of Miss Mary Aleid Schenck, of New York and Boston, to Hayden Channing, of Sherborn. The country place is "Valley Head," the Summer home of the bride's mother, Mrs. J. Frederick Schenck.

Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present at the ceremony which was performed by Rev. Arthur J. Gammack of the Lenox Trinity Episcopal Church. The bride was attended by her two little cousins, Adeline E. Greenleak of New York and Master Joseph Sears Lovering of Milton. Congressman Lathrop Brown of Long Island was best man.

MANY ILL FROM MEASLES.

Death Rate from All Causes During Week Was 16.16.

There were 183 cases of measles reported to the Boston Board of Health last week, and the disease is still raging among school children, although the authorities say the number of cases reported is normal.

There were 235 deaths, making the death rate for the week 16.66. Tuberculosis caused 19 deaths, and 75 new cases were reported. There were 37 cases of diphtheria and 1 death, 45 cases of scarlet fever and 5 deaths, 8 cases of typhoid fever, 24 deaths from pneumonia, 2 from whooping cough, 34 from heart disease and 2 from bronchitis. There were 14 deaths due to violent causes.

HOLMES DISPUTED BY HARVARD MEN

Say His Criticisms Show Ignorance of Present Conditions at College.

It didn't take the average Harvard graduate around Boston yesterday more than two seconds to declare that Rev. John Haynes Holmes, D. D., of New York, formerly of Dorchester, doesn't know the true facts when he attacks Harvard College as not giving practical education, as catering unduly to the classical and as not benefiting a man in a material wy.

"Dr. Holmes indicates his ignorance of present conditions."

"Utter nonsense."

"Unintelligent criticism."

Such were some of the phrases occurring in comments made by Harvard alumni in this city.

The minister who graduated from Harvard in 1902 said that all he now possesses of practical experience he gained for himself after leaving college, and that he goes back to such studies as he took in Harvard purely for amusement.

"We have in education," he declared, "the bugaboo that nothing is worth while unless it bears the label of classical.

"Such education is geared to the pace of special privilege.

"Why the whole curriculum of the public schools of Massachusetts—which is controlled by Harvard University—was once changed for Harvard entrance examinations."

CHARLES M. CABOT of Boston, graduate of Harvard, said yesterday:

Dr. Holmes has evidently taken his notions from some years back. There has come a new system into the college that Holmes seems to know nothing about. The courses are so arranged as to focus upon the student's future career. The desultoruy classical education for purely cultured purposes has almost disappeared.

From the Freshman year on the student today is expected to turn his attention upon his future calling, and is compelled to choose his course with that in mind.

President Lowell is a true Democrat and his persistent effort to bring classmen together in the home dormatories is an indication of the spirit of the college. The president is on the outlook to make the university a vital, productive force and Dr. Holmes indicates his ignorance of present conditions of the Harvard system of education by his sweeping denunciation.

LAWRENCE G. BROOKS, an active member of the Progressive party in Massachusetts and son of John Graham Brooks, was a classmate of Dr. Holmes and has the same experience to judge from as the New York clergyman. Mr. Brooks said:

I studied to be a teacher and consequently took many studies that have been useless to me in the legal profession, but that was not so much due to the college as it was to my change of mind.

I think Dr. Holmes puts it rather strong when he says that he looks upon the work he did in college as an amusement.

There are, of course, some students who take purely cultural studies, but even they get a discipline that is helpful in their future work, whatever it may be.

William H. Pear of the Provident Association is a graduate of Harvard and lives in Cambridge. He speaks from first hand contact with members of the present Harvard faculty.

It is utter nonsense for Holmes to say what he does and it really looks as though he wanted to say something startling rather than to stick closely to the facts. When he says that we still have the bugaboo that nothing is worth while unless it bears the label classical, he speaks in ignorance of the fact that this idea has passed and has been gone for many years.

One has but to look over the personnel of the present Harvard faculty and note what such men as Munroe, Beals, Johnson, Ward and many more like them are doing, to realize that Harvard is a very vital factor in the civic and economic life of the country.

These men are called upon to draw up city charters and to shape legislation.

The modern requirements are far different from what they were twenty years ago and any criticism to be effective should be confined to the present.

Rev. Frederick B. Allen, who was graduated from Harvard fifty years ago, when the classical system was in vogue, asserted that the discipline he received had been of inestimable practical value to him. He said:

While I am not in a position to criticize the present education, I believe it is keeping pace with other modern requirements and is more and more providing the youth with what is essential to his future career.

It is unintelligent criticism that condemns cultural education and I hardly sympathize with Dr. Holmes' point of view.

Important to all Women Readers of this Paper.

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, bearing-down feelings, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes anyone so.

But thousands of irritable, nervous, tired and broken-down women have restored their health and strength by the use of Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy.

Swamp-Root brings new life and activity to the kidneys, the cause of such troubles.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, will do for them. Every reader of this paper, who has not already tried it, may address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and receive sample bottle free by mail. Roxbury Piano Storage Salesrooms Co.

J.P.Collins

Founder of the Roxbury Piano Storage Salesrooms. The man who has done more to keep down piano prices than any other dealer in Boston. The Largest Distributor of Pianos in America.

His Great Piano Sales

A Piano Sale here is always a sacrifice, always a bargain sale, always a mark-down sale. The very nature of business, as the public knows, is one of sacrifice. The business here is not conducted like the business of a regular Piano store down town, where they are expected to make a profit on each piano—where they get their profit DIRECTLY out of the sale of pianos. We don't let any piano loaf around on the floor of the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms—it comes in, in DUE TIME a Sacrifice tag is clapped on to it, be it high grade, low grade or middle grade, and it is sold to the first man or woman who wants it for the price marked on the tag—not a cent more or less. The selling price is made on the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms' "Expense percentage" basis, and is figured to let the accounts out clean and clear without regard to profit—so you can see easily by this statement how these sales must necessarily be sacrifices. Someone's loss is your gain.

The gilded piano stores, with their costly appointments, their high-salaried sales agents, their sellers' commissions, etc., are no place for the economical piano buyer to go. Take the trouble to look around a little, go up where the rents are not so high and buy your piano right.

Alco—a car of famous French lineage

TO a famous French antecedent—the Berliet—the Alco Six owes much; for its ancestry dates back to the renowned car of France. M. Berliet sold to us the American rights to build his car and we began in 1906 by importing parts from his shops at Lyons, France, and employing his own skilled French mechanics. Today many of these men are still with us in our works at Providence.

Gradually we Americanized the car. We gave it a greater road clearance for use upon the rural turn-pike. We gave up chain drive and made it a smooth riding shaft driven car. We purchased the largest steam drop hammer in the world—one that weighs 250,000 pounds and now our smiths forge every rear axle out of a solid billet of steel. We have standardized every part.

Further than this we have done little. Our engineers told us they could improve but little upon their French model and their work has been to reduce noise, simplify and refine.

To express our own satisfaction with this car we placed our own name upon it and called it Alco—which are the first letters of the words American Locomotive Company.

Today we list it at $6,000. It is set off from other high priced cars not only by price but by sheer intrinsic merit. It has a charm rare among motor cars. We invite your interest. A half hour's time today may mean to you months of motoring luxury later on.

GIRL IS STOLEN, FATHER ASSERTS

Manuel Busemi Charges Roxbury Youth Vanished Same Day as Daughter Olga.

Sixteen-year-old Olga Busemi, one of the prettiest Italian girls in the North End, was kidnaped by a young man and is being hidden in New York or Philadelphia, according to the declaration made last night by her father, Manuel Busemi, a wealthy confectioner. The Boston police have asked the police of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore to search for the girl, who has been missing for six days.

While the father was away last Monday the daughter disappeared. Olga had been sent to the bank to deposit $100. When the father returned to his office he found the bankbook, but the record of the deposit was not entered.

Family Jewelry.

Olga handled the finances of the family and cared for her four younger sisters and brothers since her mother's death, four years ago. The father opened his safe and found that $647 in bills and the family jewelry was missing.

The same day a young man, who has been meeting Olga clandestinely, according to her father, disappeared from his home in Roxbury.

Olga's father received information from friends in New York that Olga and a young man had called at their home. She was weeping and appeared brokenhearted. The young man said the couple were leaving for Philadelphia. The father declared last night that the young man accompanying Olga in New York answers the description of the man who is missing from Roxbury.

Little Sister Weeps.

Little six-year-old Edith Busemi, who looked upon her sister as a mother, weeps freely. She wants her sister to return. The eldest brother has gone to Philadelphia to search for his missing sister in the Italian quarter of that city. He has a written request from the Boston police asking the Philadelphia authorities to hold Olga and her companion if they are found.

"My daughter was kidnaped by that man," Mr. Busemi declared last night. "I want her to come back to her home. I don't care for the money. I want Olga. She was mother to my children since my wife died. She did the cooking and helped me in my store. I told Olga to keep away from that man. Olga had a will of her own. Little Edith has cried all day and night since Olga disappeared."

WIDOW'S LEGACY CUT BY MARRIAGE

Woman May Lose Part of Fortune by Second Union Before Boy Attained Majority.

Mrs. Lewis Flanders of No. 49 Longwood avenue, Brookline, may sacrifice a part of the half million dollar fortune bequeathed her by her late husband, William Butler Woodbridge, founder of the Columbian National Life Insurance Company, for having married the man of her choice.

Mrs. Woodbridge is now fighting for the removal of the executors of her husband's will. They are James W. Westervelt, a New York lawyer, Colonel Percy Parker of Lowell and Franklin W. Ganse of Newton.

A continued hearing of Mrs. Flanders' petition before Judge Flint of the Norfolk County Probate Court was interrupted.

It was found that, according to the terms of then will, an income with certain exceptions was to go to Mrs. Woodbridge's son, West Pratt Woodbridge, if Mrs. Woodbridge remarried before her son had attained his majority. Young Woodbridge is not yet twenty-one.

Mrs. Woodbridge was married last Summer in Portland, Maine, to Lewis Flanders of No. 49 Longwood avenue, Brookline.

When this marriage was brought to Judge Flint's attention he ruled that the remarriage affected other beneficiaries mentioned under certain provisions in the will.

Accordingly the petition was amended to include these beneficiaries and filed in the Norfolk County Court at Dedham. These additional beneficiaries are three sisters of Mr. Woodbridge, Mary W. Herring of New York, Helen W. Ganse of Newton, Rebecca Woodbridge Wilson of Wilmette, Illinois and two children of a deceased brother, John Woodbridge, and Harriet Grace Woodbridge Sleezer of Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

When these interested parties have been notified and their interests properly protected the hearings are expected to be resumed.

BABY'S BODY IN POND.

The body of a week-old baby boy was found in a pond on Oakland street, Brighton, yesterday afternoon. The body was wrapped in a towel and was weighted with stones. The police believe the infant had been slain. An autopsy will be performed today by Medical Examiner Magrath. The body was discovered by an eleven-year-old boy who was fishing in the pond.

Mrs. Lewis Flanders, whose second marriage, before son by first husband reached his twenty-first year, may cost her generous slice of her inheritance.

Elect Officers for 32nd Masons

George C. Thacher of Dorchester Is Chosen as New Commander-in-Chief.

The Massachusetts Consistory of thirty-second degree Masons, held yesterday at Masonic Temple, installed the following officers:

George C. Thacher of Dorchester, commander-in-chief; Joseph A. Bryant of Newton, first lieutenant commander; Frank M. Heath of Worcester, second lieutenant commander; Herbert Austin of Boston, orator; John H. Holt of Fall River, chancellor; Joseph W. Work of Newton, treasurer; Benjamin W. Rowell of Lynn, secretary; Daniel W. Lawrence of Medford, trustee for three years.

Only three appointments were made by the new commander, the others being deferred until the October rendezvous. Those named are: Josiah T. Dyer, hospitaller; Richard Hapgood, engineer and senechal; George H. W. Bates, standard bearer.

According to the report of Secretary Rowell, the number of those who have attained the thirty-second degree is 3,344 and there are thirty-five more who have reached the twenty-ninth degree. In the last twelve months 289 were received and sixty-six died. The increase in life membership was twenty-nine.

Learn Why Yankee Countess Left Slavs

Dwindling Finances Left Szechenyi Dependent on Her and She Preferred London Society.

BUDAPEST, April 26.—The true reason for the permanent removal of Count Szechenyi and the Countess, who was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, to London, as exclusively announced by the AMERICAN some weeks ago, became known today. It was learned here tonight that Count Szechenyi has suffered severe financial losses, owing to the demoralization of business in Austria-Hungary since the beginning of the Balkan war. Not only has the Count's fortune dwindled, but it is said that his income has been reduced to practically nothing, and he has found it necessary to draw heavily upon the dower brought him by his bride.

The Countess, who feels that she has paid the piper since her marriage, has demanded that the Count change his tune and insists that if she is compelled to spend her money it must be spent in London, where she will get something in return in the way of brilliant social recognition which is denied her here.

THREE THROWN FROM AUTO.

Mrs. Carroll Farrar of No. 7 Walnut road, Somerville, was slightly injured early today when she was thrown out of her husband's autocar at Prospect and Cambridge streets, Cambridge. Her sister, Mrs. Charles Jordan of Lynn, and Frank Wade of Somerville Highlands were also thrown to the street, but were uninjured. Mrs. Farrar was treated at the Cambridge Relief Hospital. Farrar turned the machine to avoid a collision with an electric car. As he did so a tire burst and the auto slewed sharply around.

LITTLETON RAPS DIRECT ELECTION

Former Congressman Tells Beacon Society Amendment Destroyed Representative Rule.

The Beacon Society, at its last monthly banquet of the season, at the Algonquin Club last evening, had as its chief guest Martin W. Littleton, former Congressman from New York, who spoke on "Structural and Economic Changes in the Government." He declared himself in unqualified opposition to the progress of the so-called progressives of whatever party.

He asserted that the recall of judges and judicial decisions could lead only to mob rule and disaster, and he declared his own belief in the need of keeping the government in the hands of intelligent and conservative men, who shall represent the mass of the people in the legislative bodies.

Already, he said, representative government has been distroyed in the United States Senate by providing that the Senators shall be elected by the people instead of the Legislature. Henceforth, he said, the Senate will be a proletariat and not a body of aristocratic men who understand government and will run it on a basis of intelligence rather than of ignorance.

He said that revolutionary fathers established the United States government after studying all previous governments of history, and they chose a form of government under which the people should select their representatives to make good laws for them, he said, but not intelligent enough to make good themselves.

City Hall Boys Have the Glooms

Laborers and Others Getting Increases, but the Young Folks Must Pass Their Exams.

There is gloom among the office boys at City Hall. While the city laborers and other classes of city employes are getting salary increases, the majority of the office boys are scheduled to remain at $5 per week.

The Civil Service Commission is responsible for the minimum wage for the youthful employes.

Some time ago notice was served on department heads that no office boy could get over $5 a week from the city departments unless he took the examination for minors, the successful passing of which would entitle the office boys to draw a salary up to $400 a year.

Forthwith all of the arithmetics, geographies and spelling books were dug out of the closet and the boys started to brush up for the "exams." At least some of them did, but the results show that the brushing up was not very successful.

MRS. BOURNE GETS DIVORCE.

Parted from Former United States Senator from Oregon.

PORTLAND, Ore., April 26.—Mrs. Lillian Elizabeth Bourne was granted a divorce from former United States Senator Jonathan Bourne of Oregon today on the grounds of cruelty. No property rights were involved, as a settlement had been agreed upon before the suit was brought. Bourne was not present in court to contest, being in Washington on governmental duty.

HOUSE ORDERS GLOVER'S ARREST

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Declaring that Charles C. Glover, Washington banker, is guilty of an affront to the privileges of the House by assaulting Representative Thetus W. Sims, of Tennessee, a week ago, a special investigating committee of the House filed a formal report today recommending that Glover be arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before the House for trial on contempt charges.

Kidney Trouble

Results Most Feared by Mankind

WARNER'S SAFE REMEDY THE KIDNEY LIVER AND BRIGHT'S DISEASE

Greatly reduced facsimile of package and bottle.

Ask any man or woman what disease they fear the most. If they think before replying, the answer will usually be Bright's Disease.

Ask them why, they will tell you that kidney disease is most dreaded because of its tendency to advance from the early stages of the trouble to the dangerous, or fatal stage, generally before the sufferer realizes he or she is dangerously ill.

This fear and worry on the part of humanity is needless—for, if the cause is properly cared for—the effect is done away with. Nature has equipped humanity with an effective system of danger signals, so that if the warning of a peculiar lame back, torpid liver, cloudy urine, inflammation of the bladder, is heeded—relief can be speedily found in the use of

TAXED LESS, THE RICHER THEY ARE

Hull Tells How Poor Bear Society's Burdens in Defending Income Tax.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—The richer a person grows, the less he pays in relation to his property or income. Experience has shown that under the present tax system personal property practically escapes taxation for either local or state purposes.

These statements were made today in the house by Representative Hull of Tennessee in defending the income tax which is carried in the Underwood tariff bill and is estimated to yield the government $70,000,000 a year in revenues.

Andrew Carnegie is singled out as a shining example of the rich who escape taxation. He holds $400,000,000 of United States Steel Corporation securities. Until recently he has paid State taxes on $5,000,000 of personal wealth. New York city authorities have increased this assessment recently to $10,000,000.

"The rich investor," said Mr. Hull, "the money lender, and the wealthy business and professional man cover up most of their taxable property. The intangible personality, stocks, bonds and other securities, escape taxation almost entirely."

The Republican is wedded to class legislation, according to Mr. Hull. Manufacturers have been in a tariff partnership with the government, and have waxed fat. For more than half a century there has been a constant struggle by the wealthy to shift the burden of taxation to the shoulders and backs of the weaker, poorer and less influential citizens.

Statistics of property valuations were given by Mr. Hull to show that wealth was not being taxed, and was not bearing its fair share of the burden.

Cummings Death Inquest Reopened

Action in the Malden Mystery to Be Followed, It Is Believed, by Arrest.

The inquest into the death of Miss Elizabeth M. Cummings of No. 188 Cross street, Malden, aged eighteen years, who died under mysterious circumstances more than a month ago, was reopened yesterday in the Malden District Court before Judge Sweetser, when two new witnesses, whose names the police kept secret, were heard. Captain Timothy J. Foley, Inspector George E. Greenleaf of the Malden police and State Inspector Silas E. Smith also took the stand for a second time.

The reopening of the case and the calling of two new witnesses after it had been generally believed that the case was completed has given rise to rumors that an arrest may be expected soon.

It also became known yesterday, after the inquest was finished, that the police were seeking a woman who formerly resided on Belmont Hill, Malden, as a witness in the Helen A. Blakeslee death case, and that the Blakeslee inquest would be reopened as soon as this woman is located.

DYING MAN TURNED BACK

Ship's Officers Refused to Take Him to His Beloved Azores.

After journeying all the way from Southern California to Boston, in the last stages of pulmonary tuberculosis, in order to take the White Star liner Canopic for the Azores and die in his native isle, Jesse Ferriara, a sixty-year-old Azorian Portuguese, was turned back by Dr. Dryden Smylie, the ship's surgeon. Dr. Smylie said that the man would not live two days at sea if rough weather was encountered and sent him to the Carney Hospital.

He wept bitterly when he was refused passage and said that he had hoped to die in the house his wife had died in and be buried by her side in the churchyard at St. Michael's. He was accompanied on his journey by a nephew.

"BETSY" ROSS IS PUT UNDER FIRE

Representative Sullivan Says She Did Not Make First American Flag.

Is Mrs. Elizabeth Ross of Philadelphia far-famed in song and story as plain "Betsy" Ross—doomed to lose her "old glory" of having been the maker of the first Star Spangled Banner?

Representative Benjamin F. Sullivan of East Boston says so. He has already placed the "Betsy" Ross version on the dusty shelves among the historical myths.

Representative Sullivan says the first national ensign was sewn together by a soldier. And according to him, the flag "makings" were these:

One RED petticoat.
One WHITE shirt.
One BLUE overcoat.

The East Boston lawmaker's account of "how the first flag was born" sticks a knife into the beliefs of 100,000,000 legend-loving American hearts. Ask any schoolboy who sewed the first emblem, and he'l speak up pertly and say:

No, Says Sullivan.

"Why, Betsy Ross did, of course."

"But Betsy Ross didn't," declares Representative Sullivan. And he goes on to explain his version in this way:

"Before the present flag was adopted by Congress, soldiers with the Continental army at Fort Stanwix, N. Y., raised over the fort the flag which furnished the idea for the Stars and Stripes. The soldiers had no material save a blue overcoat, a red woolen petticoat and a white shirt. So they tore them in strips and sewed them together into a flag. That was the first flag.

"This happened during Burgoyne's campaign in 1777, near Rome, N. Y. The flag that Washington raised under the old Cambridge elm was a British flag, with red and white stripes. Our flag was adopted by Congress on June 14, 1777."

What Others Say.

Thus it is that the East Boston legislator flags the time-honored tale of sewing together of the first flag.

But folks there be that take issue with him. They say that Burgoyne's campaign came in the Fall of 1777, AFTER Congress had adopted the national standard. They say that Betsy Ross DID sew the first flag, all other statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, who IS right?

7,000 IN FUNERAL LINE AT MILFORD

Women and Children Follow Strike Victim's Body to the Grave.

MILFORD, April 26.—Preceding the funeral of Emilio Bacchiocci, the Hopedale striker who was shot and killed on Thursday morning, a remarkable demonstration took place at the family home, No. 34 Cedar street. Hundreds of Italian workmen filed through the little parlor where the body lay in its coffin, kissed the forehead of the dead man and swore to avenge his death.

The demonstration following his funeral today was equally remarkable. Fully 7,000 persons accompanied the funeral cortege to the grave and at least 15,000 people lined the streets to watch the slow possession. During the funeral no Italian workmen reported at their places of employment in Milford today, no matter in what capacity or for whom they were employed. No Italian stores were open for business.

Saloons Closed.

The thirteen saloons in Milford were closed during the hours of the funeral service. Extra police were on duty but the utmost quiet prevailed.

The funeral services were conducted at 2:30 this afternoon by the Rev. Rocco Petracra in the Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus on East Main street. Following the service in the church the procession to the grave at St. Mary's Cemetery, a short distance from the home of the dead man, was begun.

At the head of the procession walked twenty-five men pushing bicycles draped with black crepe. Every person who walked as escort to the funeral cortege wore a red carnation.

Behind the men pushing the crape-draped bicycles walked two bare-headed men carrying a large floral mound. Next came Verdi's Italian Boys' Band of Milford. Behind the band marched the Italian Workingmen's Society of Milford, 400 men, headed by Joseph Marcone and Rudolph Minni. Next were two little girls wearing white veils and clad in white from heels to head. They, too, carried a floral mound.

Carry Picture of Victim.

About 1,000 school children of all ages followed. A large number of Italian women walked behind the children. Two more bareheaded men bore aloft a framed picture of the dead man and his wife. The picture was adorned with lilies of the valley.

Four white horses drew the hearse and the eight pall bearers walked on either side. Behind the hearse six men with locked arms walked abreast and behind them came two more men, bareheaded, and leading between them the six-year-old son of the dead man. There were about twenty-four hacks and twelve other vehicles in the funeral procession. A second band alternated with the boys' band in playing dirges.

Hingham Gardner Found Dead in Pond

Mystery in Drowning of Edward Burke, Supposed to Have Met with Accident.

The Hingham police encountered a drowning mystery last night when the body of Edward Burke, an assistant gardner, was found floating on the surface of the Mill Pond, near the New Haven railroad tracks.

No reason was known for Mr. Burke taking his own life and it was supposed that the drowning was accidental but no one saw him fall into the water, nor had any cries been heard.

The body was taken from the water by Police Chief Washington James and patrolmen. Investigation showed that Mr. Burke had started toward the pond in the late afternoon to dump some rubbish there, as one report said. As no one is supposed to dump rubbish in that water, and as Mr. Burke was doubtless acquainted with that regulation, the idea that he would do that was hardly credited.

Mr. Burke was forty-eight years old, single, and lived on Green street court. He was employed on the Edwin Hill estate at Old Colony Hill.

DELAY IMPERATOR.

HAMBURG, April 26.—It was announced today that the trial trip of the Hamburg-American liner Imperator, scheduled for Monday, has been postponed until Thursday because of the recent mishaps. The Kaiser will not go on the cruise, as planned, but will send the Crown Prince instead. The giant liner probably will go to Genoa, via the Canaries and Gibraltar.

TELEPHONE PEACE BOARD IS NAMED

The establishment of a progressive industrial peace was assured yesterday between the New England Telephone Company and its 2,200 union girl operators, in the completion of a joint adjustment committee made up of three representatives of the employes and three from the company.

Miss Annie Malloy, Miss Mary G. Meagher and Miss Mary F. Murray, the three girls named by the union, were accepted by the officials of the company after tabulating the total vote cast by both union and nonunion operatives. And this notwithstanding the fact that the union girls voted at their headquarters, while the others voted at the company's exchanges earlier in the week.

E. K. Hall, vice-president of the company; J. F. Dwinell, district traffic chief, and B. J. Bowen, traffic engineer, were named to serve for the corporation, which completed the board. The selection of Mr. Hall in particular is said to have been a happy choice, and very acceptable to the operators as a whole.

Because of the fact that no mention had been made of the method followed by the operators in electing their portion of this committee, in their near-strike settlement, it was feared that the company and the union might clash on this issue. But that danger point having been passed in safety, the peace board now is complete and both parties to the agreement appear satisfied with the outcome.

MALDEN AT ODDS ON FIRE OFFICIAL

Reappointment of Colonel Nutter as Commissioner the Latest Issue.

Will Colonel Charles P. Nutter be reappointed Fire Commissioner of Malden by Mayor Schumaker? Close friends of the Mayor say no. Friends of Colonel Nutter say yes.

Friends of the administration say the Mayor is on the still hunt for a candidate to succeed Colonel Nutter. Colonel Nutter's appointment followed a long and stormy campaign between ex-Mayor George H. Fall and his Board of Aldermen. The Mayor stood by the late Thomas W. Hough for Fire Commissioner until city business was nearly deadlocked. Then he commenced naming candidates. Finally Colonel Nutter landed the job.

With the business men of Malden, however, Colonel Nutter has not proved a popular choice. Sending to outside cities for work on the fire apparatus has been the cause of much complaint.

Some say the Mayor wants to name a new police commissioner and put the present commissioner, ex-Mayor Charles G. Warren, in charge of the fire department.

HAVE YOU CATARRH?

Unless Properly Treated With Hyomei This Disease May Become Serious.

Catarrhal troubles are far more dangerous than they seem at first thought.

If you have catarrh, usually indicated by sniffing, stopped up head, droppings in throat, and morning choking, there is an irritated state of the mucous membrane which affords an ideal lodgment and culture medium for disease germs, especially those of consumption.

Do not allow the dangerous germs which may be breathed into the throat and lungs to begin their work of destruction.

The easiest, simplest, quickest, surest and cheapest way to check catarrh is by the direct method, breathing Hyomei. This wonderful medicated air treatment does not drug and derange the stomach, but is breathed in through the Hyomei inhaler, directly following and destroying all disease germs that may have been inhaled, and healing and vitalizing the tissues of the throat, nose and lungs so as to render catarrh and all other germ infections no longer possible.

The usual way in which Hyomei is sold by druggists is the best evidence of confidence in the treatment, and should dispel all doubts as to its curative properties. They are authorized to refund the purchase price to anyone whom Hyomei fails to benefit, so you do not risk a cent in testing its healing virtues. A complete outfit costs but $1.00. Extra bottles of liquid if later needed, 50 cents.

Sold by druggists everywhere.

County Republicans Welcome Boom for Guests, Launched by John D. Long.

The Middlesex Club, one of the leading Republican organizations of the State, celebrated "Grant Night" last evening and cheered the suggestion that former Governor Herbert S. Hadley of Missouri be the Republican candidate for President in 1916 and that the president of Columbia University, Nicholas Murray Butler, be his running mate.

The annual dinner was held at the Copley-Plaza. Both Hadley and Butler were guests of honor.

Former-Governor John D. Long proposed the ticket. Former-Congressman Samuel L. Powers, president of the Middlesex Club, seconded the suggestion and 300 club members arose and cheered.

Largest Meeting Since 1896.

It was the largest meeting of Middlesex Club Republicans that has gathered since the dinner after the election of McKinley in 1896.

"We are militant Republicans, the Progressives are a party only of the moment; we will fight our fight for the protection of our industries, and in 1916 we will displace the Democrats from power and install a Republican government again in Washington," rang the keynote of the gathering.

Three Ex-Governors.

Seated at the head table besides the guests of the evening were former Governors John D. Long, John Q. A. Brackett and Eben S. Draper, Chairman Charles E. Hatfield of the Republican State Committee and Republican city and town chairmen of Middlesex.

While all speakers extolled General Grant, the present day condition of the Republican party was the one theme of the evening.

"The new Democratic tariff bill will close the lands of New England and we will have to go raising figs and oranges around here," declared ex-Congressman Powers.

"We must stand together as Republicans and without any fads," said President Butler, "and bring back the good old Republican ship to its moorings. Whatever reforms the Republican party needs can be supplied from within. We need not to have them applied from without."

"Just as Grant never whined but kept hammering away for our ultimate good," said former Governor Long, "so we will keep hammering away. And we will restore the government to the Republican party. The present condition is but an accident of political fate."

Denounce Tariff Bill.

Through all the speeches besides suggestions of Hadley and Butler for the Republican ticket in 1916, ran denunciations of the Democratic party for its proposed tariff bill and denunciations as well of the Progressives.

The mention of Colonel Roosevelt's name brought groans from the assembled club members.

"Scholars, orators and statesmen," said ex-Governor Long in proposing the ticket of Hadley and Butler. "The one from the great and growing State of the Middle West, the other from the imperial State of New York. Neither could be misled into following false idols. They kept the faith."

What Hadley Said.

Former Governor Hadley said: "If the dominant personality of the present Cabinet should commit the Democratic party to as wild financial theories as he did in 1896, if mistaken theories of economics when enacted or about to be enacted into law by the Democratic party under its new-found teacher, should bring upon us a period of business depression and adversity, as it did from 1893 to 1897, if the Democratic party in protecting our interests in the Philippines, in the use of the Panama Canal, or in the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, should as signally fail to maintain our national rights and honor, as it did in 1812 or in 1860, or if it should plunge the country into war with Mexico or a scheme of territorial aggrandizement or for political prestige, as it did in 1846, can any one seriously doubt that those who followed McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft to victory from 1896 to 1908 would again march shoulder to shoulder back to victory and power?

"But, if Ulysses S. Grant could lead us today, as he led us in the past, I do not believe he would want our party to be simply a party of negation or opposition, time serving with complacency until Democratic mistakes should bring us party unity and success. We should be as anxious to secure success by the principles and the policies which we affirmatively advocate as by the defeat of those we aggressively oppose.

"Under the leadership of the Republican party the work for a larger measure of social and industrial justice in this country has been effectively begun both in the nation and in the States. A continuance of this work is more than a question of party expediency—it is a matter of party duty and honor, and we will meet it."

Predicts Wage Reduction.

President Butler took direct issue on tariff matters with President Wilson. He said:

"We cannot bring the labor of our country into direct competition with the poorly paid labor of Europe. Our industries here must suffer if the Underwood tariff bill is enacted into law. New England industries will find themselves the principal sufferer together with New England labor.

"Decreased wages must be the inevitable result.

"It is the duty of the Republican party to put the matter right before the American people. To do so we must make it plainer to them just how the party stands on this great question. It was plain enough, we thought, at the Chicago convention, but we were mistaken. We should make it plain to the great mass of people that our belief is, that the tariff should be fixed after a scientific report has been made before Congress.

"We should regulate foreign trade by reciprocal agreements and treaties."

VETERAN ASSOCIATES MEET.

Colonel Edward Glines Among the Speakers.

The 14th annual reunion of the Veteran Association of M Company, Eighth Massachusetts, U. S. V., took place last night at the Revere House. Sergeant Arthur W. Briggs was toastmaster. The speakers were Colonel Edward Glines, ex-Mayor of Somerville; Major George I. Canfield, Lieutenant W. F. Young and Lieutenant W. Kevlell. Captain Howard Gillson gave an illustrated lecture on the army manoeuvres last Summer. These officers were elected: President, Captain J. E. Wiley; vice-president, Corporal H. A. Gilson; secretary and treasurer, Private Fred J. Durling.

FELLSWAY CLUB HOST.

Gentleman's night was observed by the Fellsway Club ladies auxiliary of Somerville, at the Quincy House, last night. There was a dinner and bridge whist was played. Mrs. W. B. Cornwell, president of the auxiliary, presided. George Law, president of the club, spoke. Mrs. Grace R. Crane sang.

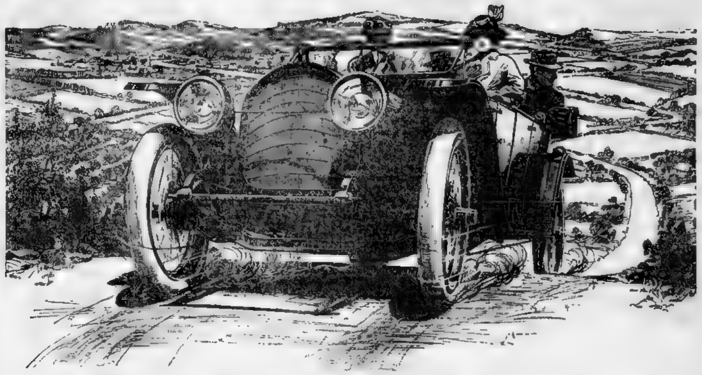
A Car of Character-Beauty that is Rare

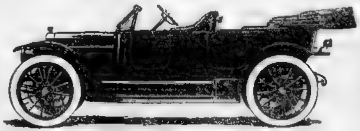


IN the Cross Country the public finds an expression of your own good taste. There is in this car a certain something which gives it character beyond outward grace.

To the eye it presents a pleasing picture of straight flowing lines and graceful curves. Rarely does it pass without remark. Long, low and balanced perfectly, its silent dignity of movement, so much admired on the boulevard, may be attributed to those same qualities which make possible its sturdy performance on the road.

Like a fine horse, it inspires the owner's pride and gives him rank in his neighborhood as a man whose taste is to be admired.

The radiator is high and distinctive in design. The large electric front and flush electric dash lamps make it a car easily distinguished among many. Trimmed in nickel, with body, fenders and fillers of black enamel, its appearance is striking.



The Cross Country, $1,875

The fenders are broad, strong and sturdy. The doors are wide and the compartments large enough to accommodate the family. Long and low hung, you can whip this car around the corner in a jiffy and the rear wheels hug the road.

It's a car to delight a woman's eye. To her rare good taste will appeal its perfect proportions and its superb finish. To this we may attribute the greatest pleasure in its ownership.

A beautiful four-color reproduction of the Cross Country, from an oil painting by R. Philip Brainard, is ready for mailing. See the Cross Country by all means, at any Jeffery branch or dealer's display room, but send for the picture anyway.

CHELSEA LIQUOR FIGHT IN COURTS

Hearing on Finn's Battle to Remain Licensing Head Set for Tuesday

Chelsea is stirred by another liquor license row. License wars come pretty frequently in Chelsea, but this latest one is the most peppery ever.

There are two storm centres in the present mix-up. Here they are:

1—The Chelsea License Commission, collectively, officially, individually and personally.

2—The very wet district at the Revere-Chelsea line which is generally referred to as the "Oasis" or [illegible] by the thirsty of Revere, Lynn, Saugus, Swampscott and other nearby no-license places.

The battle on in the License Commission is to fought out in the Supreme court next Tuesday. Over at the "Oasis" the fight will centre this week about the issuing of another license in that section.

May Grant Another.

At present there are six licenses. Commissioner George F. Keough of the licensing board says that the extra licence will be granted. This will increase the "six saloon sisters" at the "Oasis" to seven, if the plan goes through.

The trouble started in the licensing board. The commissioners are Mr. Keough, James E. Finn and Ransellear Towle. Finn WAS the chairman. Last week he was deposed by Mayor Willard and Towle was appointed to take his place.

Finn was appointed by former Mayor Malone, who was defeated by Mayor Willard last Fall. Finn's friends last night charged that "politics" was behind his ousting. The air was soon thick with charges and counter charges.

Finn protested uselessly against the choice of Towle for the chairmanship. Then Finn decided to take the matter to the courts.

Ask Court for Writ.

His attorneys filed in the Supreme Court a petition for a writ of mandamus asking for the re-instatement of Finn as chairman of the Licensing Board. The Court issued an order, returnable Tuesday morning, to Mayor Willard and Commissioners Towle and Keough, ordering them to appear and show cause why Finn should not be re-instated.

Since Chelsea swung into the license column, several years ago, there has been talk about the manner in which the licenses are issued. Some citizens argue that for a city the size of Chelsea thirty-two saloons are a little too many, and that it is unfair to post so many places at the Chelsea and Revere line.

Revere, it is argued, is a no-license town and should not have so many temptations to young men on its border.

MISS MARGUERITE LE BRETON, named as sponsor for destroyer year and a half before launching.

© by HARRIS AND EWING WASHINGTON D.C.

Capital Belle to Christen Destroyer

Miss Marguerite Le Breton to Name the McDougal, to Be Launched at Bath in 1914.

BATH, Me., April 26.—Unusual interest is taken here in the announcement from Washington that Miss Marguerite Le Breton, a Washington society girl, is to christen the destroyer McDougal, which is to be built at the Bath ship building yards.

It is the first time the Navy Department has picked a sponsor so far ahead of the launching of the ship. The McDougal will not glide down the greased ways for at least a year and a half, the Bath company announced today.

Work on the McDougal will be started in about six months. The destroyer will be a sister ship of the Cummings and Cassin. The three have already been nicknamed the "triplets."

The McDougal will be the last of the "triplets" to be launched. The other two are now nearing completion and are expected to be ready for christening in about a month. Their sponsors have not yet been chosen by the navy officials.

Miss Le Breton is the granddaughter of Commander David McDougal, for whom the destroyer is named.

R. R. TREASURER GONE.

Chicago-Terre Haute Official Is Said to Be $2,500 Short.

CHICAGO, April 26.—Edward F. Young, treasurer of the Chicago, Terre Haute & Southwestern Railway Company, is being sought by detectives, who have a warrant for his arrest on a charge of embezzlement. Young disappeared from his office last Tuesday, following discovery, it is said, of a shortage of $2,500 in his accounts, and the warrant was sworn out.

GOES TO ARCTIC AT 69.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 26.—Captain Peter Bayne, aged sixty-nine, probably the last survivor of Dr. Charles Hall's Franklin research expedition, that sought for three years, beginning in 1866, for traces of the remains of the Sir John Franklin expedition, has purchased the old Arctic schooner Duxbury and is now outfitting her here for a cruise to Victoria Land, where Sir John Franklin's body is buried. He will sail June 1.

BRANDEIS LETTER LAID TO 11 MEN

President Lee of Fruit and Produce Exchange Says Directors Ousted Lawyer.

President Alfred P. Lee of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange wrote a letter to the AMERICAN yesterday, in ardent championship of Alton E. Briggs, the Fruit and Produce secretary, and then got away somewhere to a place where reporters could not quiz him about the vote of his Board of Directors dismissing Louis D. Brandeis before the Attorney for the people had fairly got a start in the New Haven battle before Interstate Commerce Commission. [illegible]

There are 800 members of the Fruit & Produce Exchange. There are only eleven members of the Board of Directors. These eleven include President Lee—the head of a chain store combination known as the Cloverdale Company—and Vice-President Frank E. Cheney.

There were signs of revolt against the Lee-Briggs dynasty yesterday and last night, among the 780 fruit and produce men who are not members of the Board of Directors. This spirit of revolt has been growing ever since the public got all the correspondence that has passed between the Exchange and Attorney Brandeis.

Brandeis Asked No Pay.

The history of the great lawyer's connection with them appears to be like [illegible]:

June 24, 1912, Secretary Briggs called upon Mr. Brandeis to ask him if he would appear for the Fruit and Produce Exchange, in the matter of New England railroad service, before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

June 26, 1912, Mr. Brandeis gladly agreed to act as counsel, but stipulated that, treating the task as a public service, he would not accept any compensation.

June 27, 1912, Secretary Briggs wrote that Mr. Brandeis' "favorable decision" was "accepted with much enthusiasm by our members." Note that Mr. Brandeis had "decided" something; he had been requested to take up the work. Note also that it was the MEMBERS of the Fruit and Produce Exchange who were enthusiastic.

> That you will consider such service as a "public service" needs no comment on my part in attempting to express appreciation. When a man places himself, as you have done, in offering his services for the benefit of his fellow men without asking any pecuniary return, we can at least hope that the compensation of gratitude will exist in its highest degree, and we believe such gratitude does exist.

Ten Months Roll Around.

(Ten months elapse; there have been many hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Mellen ring is being uncovered; AND THEN):

April 24, 1913. The Fruit and Produce Exchange DIRECTORS write Mr. Brandeis that in accepting his gratuitous service for investigating the matter of unsatisfactory freight service they did not anticipate continued activity for the Exchange after that particular feature of the investigation was concluded. They said:

> We find today that THE PRESENT TURN WHICH THE INVESTIGATION HAS TAKEN DOES NOT MEET WITH APPROVAL UPON THE PART OF A CONSIDERABLE PORTION OF OUR MEMBERS and it is the expression of OUR DIRECTORS that further representation on your part for the Exchange be not continued.

Members of the Fruit and Produce Exchange have been looking over this correspondence again and again since Friday.

E. J. Twombly, for example, the fruit and produce barker at No. 48 Clinton street, writes to Mr. Brandeis that in his opinion fully seven hundred of the eight hundred members agree with him that the action of the eleven directors was "unjust" and "mean." Further he writes:

> I think you are doing a splendid service for the New England public and I believe the great majority of people appreciate it. I believe it is a good thing for the people to know of such a surprising state of affairs as exist in the New Haven and in the Boston & Maine railroads, and I for one hope it will be shown up in full.

Charge an Injustice.

In the earlier editions of the AMERICAN yesterday there was some editorial mention of Secretary Briggs of the Exchange, some reference to his work at the State House AGAINST PURE BILLS, and some speculation about his part in the Brandeis dismissal.

President Lee of the Fruit and Produce Exchange, and the Cloverdale combine, wrote the AMERICAN immediately that this newspaper had done Secretary Briggs a "very, very great injustice, as he was absolutely not responsible for the action of our Board of Directors, which was unanimous."

"You have done Mr. Briggs a very, very great injustice," President Lee wrote again, "and it should be corrected." Reporters anxious for Mr. Lee's assistance in correcting the injustice to Mr. Briggs, could not find him.

Secretary Briggs, at his home in Chelsea, told a reporter that his position with the exchange is that of a paid employe who gets his orders and tries his level best to carry them out.

DANCE HALL EVILS EXPOSED BY A WOMAN

Mrs. Mary E. Paddon of Roxbury Tells of Conditions She Saw While in Disguise.

YOUNG PEOPLE ARE IN PERIL

With her hair pompadoured and rolled down over her forehead, and dressed according to her idea of the appearance of the average girl who attends public dances, Mrs. Mary E. Paddon of Roxbury has investigated thirteen Roxbury dance halls.

Mrs. Paddon mingled with the dancers and was to all intents and purposes one of them.

Yesterday she gave the AMERICAN the results of her investigation. Her story is remarkable. As she talked she glanced at the pages of a diary she has kept during the weeks of her investigation.

Hre are some of the things Mrs. Paddon says she has seen, and which she believes should be corrected:

Girls sitting in men's laps.

A crap game.

Men drinking and showing the effects of it.

A free-for-all fight.

Chorus girls dancing with young boys.

Crowds on the second or third floor without fire-escapes.

Mrs. Paddon is the secretary of the Children's Welfare League of Roxbury. Her home is No. 117 Warren street. She has had a corps of assistants. She said:

Mrs. Paddon's Views.

There are all sorts of dance halls—good and bad. I have seen both kinds. I have seen things that one can scarcely believe. And it is impossible for me to tell more than a few of the things I saw Everywhere there were young girls—girls under seventeen. The law forbids girls under seventeen from attending dances without their parents—but there they were, just the same.

In one hall I saw half a dozen girls sitting in men's laps in the chairs at the side of the hall. They attracted little attention from the other dancers.

In another hall I saw a gang of men and boys shooting craps in one corner. Three times the police stopped the game, but as fast as the officers turned away they were at it again.

In one hall liquor was being served. I saw men drinking and I saw these same men and others showing the effects of their drinking in their walk and their speech and manner.

I saw a free-for-all fight start in one hall. The police stopped it, but they had their difficulties before the hall quieted down.

Some of the halls were badly crowded. In one place where the license allows 500 to attend there were at least 700. The air was close and hot. I saw two girls faint, and I asked other girls when they had to get to work the next day.

Dance All Night; Work Days.

One said she had to get up at 5:30 in the morning. How these girls can dance to all hours of the night and then get up at daylight, I cannot see.

I found several halls on the second or third floors. In no place was there a proper fire escape. Any fire of serious proportions would have turned those dancing, singing crowds into shrieking mobs and would have meant scores of deaths.

I stayed in the halls till late at night. It was curious to see the change in the character of the patrons, and even in the action of those who had been there early in the evening, as midnight drew near. There were few improper dances of the tango variety, but sometimes you would see two men dancing together in a disagreeable fashion.

But about half past eleven, a queer sort of change seemed to come over the crowd. The girls were tired, and showed it in their faces. They showed it, too, in that there was more laxity—a general "freeness of conduct." It was during the hours from half past eleven on that the worst things occurred.

About that time of night, too, the chorus girls would begin to come in. I saw scores of them—gaily dressed, painted and powdered, gay and daring I saw them dancing with young men, scarcely more than boys.

Our Child's Welfare League is working to stop this sort of thing. We want to open an experimental dance hall—to be conducted along the lines a civic dance hall would have to follow. We don't want to bar the girls who work from any fun in the evening; but we do believe that fun can be made innocent and harmless, instead of the sort of dangerous thing that is going on ARTHUR BEANE, Harvard graduate, who is now social mentor for Mr. Jack Dahlgren, the son of Mrs. Harry Lehr, Newport society leader.

Harvard Hard Hit by Efficiency Plan

Something Terrible! Gold Coast Is All Upset, but Everybody Toes the Mark.

Harvard has been hit by an efficiency wave and the "Gold Coast" is in an uproar. The wave has hit the "Gold Coasters" hardest of all.

The college has installed a sort of "punching the time clock" system. Already eight of the wealthiest students are toeing the mark in the matter of getting around to the classes.

Here are four of the laggars:

Douglas Lawson, '14, son of Thomas W. Lawson. He lives in Holworthy Hall and belongs to the Hasty Pudding and Phoenix Clubs and is president of the Institute of 1770.

George Browne Post, '14, of New York city. He lives in Claverly Hall and belongs to the Hasty Pudding and Sphinx Clubs.

P. L. Cable, '14. He lives in Dunster Hall and belongs to the Institute of 1770 and the Southern Club.

A. G. Webster, '14, of Worcester. He lives in Gray's Hall.

The students call the new system "being on special probation." Each student who is found "remiss" in his studies or attendance on classes, is given a card which is placed in University Hall, just outside the office of Recorder George Washington Cram. On his card the student must place a cross like this X—every weekday, sharply at 8.55 o'clock If he is late, he gets a severe reprimand and a warning not to be late a second time.

Col. Gaston Wants Strecker Placed

Would Make Financial News Man Port Collector and Burnett Postmaster; O'Neil Helping.

Joseph H. O'Neil, president of the Federal Trust Company and former Congressman, was identified by Democratic gossips yesterday as the principal backer of Charles B. Strecker in Mr. Strecker's ambition to be Collector of the Port.

It was said that Mr. O'Neil is interesting himself vastly in the Strecker candidacy by special request of Col. William A. Gaston.

The same gentlemen, it was reported by Democrats, are behind the movement to make John T. Burnett of Southboro the next Democratic postmaster of Boston. Southboro is a Worcester County town, twenty-eight miles from Boston, but Mr. Burnett is in business in India street. He was formerly secretary of the Boston Elevated Railway Company.

There's a POULTRY PAGE in today's American that ought to interest every person who ever ate an egg.

JACK DAHLGREN OF GOLD COAST HAS A "NURSE"

Mrs. Harry Lehr's Son Under the Watchful Eye of a 'Grad,' and Has Got to Be Good.

IN TRAINING FOR SOCIETY

Jack Dahlgren, Harvard '16, has a "nurse."

That's the way his friends express it over on Harvard's "Gold Coast," where, as everybody knows, all the boys of "our set" are wont to reside while matriculating at the university across the Charles.

The "nurse"—perhaps we should call him companion, guide, tutor, or even keeper—is Mr. Arthur Beane, Harvard graduate and newly chosen manager of the Harvard Union. Mr. Beane has his work cut out for him in any event.

His duties are to see that the young Mr. Dahlgren, who is very wealthy, a freshman, stepson of Harry Lehr and son of Mrs. Harry Lehr, heir to several fortunes, stops indulging in

After the theatre dinners.
Flirtations.
Joy rides.
Expensive checker matches and other parlor pastimes.
Squandering money on "hot dogs."
Throwing electric light bulbs into the street to hear them burst and a dozen of a hundred other things which seem perfectly proper methods of working off youthful exuberance to the youthful minds of mere freshmen.

Rather Welcomes the Idea.

The young Mr. Dahlgren, finding himself the centre of a group of congenial spirits on the Gold Coast, quite naturally contracted the habit of sitting up nights.

Which in turn led to other things and—

Therefore the advent of Mr Arthur Beane, companion, tutor, guide, keeper, nurse, guardian—call him what you will.

The Gold Coasters call him "nurse," meaning no disrespect thereby.

To have a "nurse" is a new wrinkle for the Gold Coast and the young Mr Dahlgren rather welcomes the novelty.

He does not approve so thoroughly, however, of his enforced removal from the very centre of the Gold Coast, in Ridgely Hall to a morest little residence where he has to pass the scrutiny each day of two very estimable elderly maiden ladies.

Society to Be His Trade.

Mrs. Lehr, Jack's mother, who is a famous social leader in Philadelphia, New York and Newport, has announced that Jack is being educated to take a leading position in social affairs later on—that is, society is to be Jack's trade, and as an amateur in what will be his future vocation, it is said around the college—especially since the nurse was appointed—that Jack is no slouch.

Mr. Beane is Jack's special guardian, while the two maiden ladies where he now is domiciled, also keep a careful eye over Jack.

Mr. Beane is right on the job.

Jack is getting a wrinkle.

It all came about because Jack flunked his mid-year exams and spent a whole lot of time amusing himself by running a graphophone, dropping electric light bulbs out of the window to hear them pop in the alleyway, playing hide and seek in the Ridgely elevator, running the machine up and down madly until the janitor fainted, and a few other youthful pranks.

After the melancholy result of the examinations the college professors held a faculty meeting at Harvard and Mr. John V. Dahlgren's name came up a few times at the session. Then a letter came over from New York and Jack's dream of college life as a thing of joy forever was rudely exploded. Bag and baggage he was toted over to an ordinary residence far from the Gold Coast, numbered 40 Kirkland street, and was placed in charge of the two maiden ladies who own the house.

It was a long drop from the joys of Ridgely to No. 40 Kirkland street

MUNSTERBERG HAS NEW TYPE OF HUMAN EVIL

'Intellectual Underworld' a Growing Peril, Psychologist Warns Society.

TELLS OF HIS QUEER MAIL

Professor Hugo Munsterberg, the renowned Harvard psychologist, declares that society—meaning all of us—is being undermined by a terrible menace which he calls "the intellectual underworld."

Thousands of people, he asserts, are mentally abnormal, are unable to think logically or intelligently, and are being led farther and farther astray because of hordes of faking mediums, astrologists, palmists, etc., who prey upon these weak intellects.

In proof that the country is filled with an army of these superstitious and credulous persons, the Harvard psychologist points to the hundreds of weird and irrational letters that have flooded him recently seeking the solution of many queer and impossible problems.

"My loved one," one of these letters reads. "Out of the realms of light and truth I come to you, etc., etc."

Another runs: "Dear Sir: I know of a man who can diagnose any ailment, prescribe a course of treatment and effect a cure—while this person is in a trance condition."

Wanted Him as Partner.

One clairvoyant desired to share her business with him. Another, who declared that she could produce railroad tracks, begged the professor to take this power from her

Dr. Munsterberg lays the blame for this gross credulity and susceptibility upon the shoulders of the so-called seer class.

"These palmists and mediums should be handled by the government and treated as frauds," he frankly says.

"Newspapers should not be permitted to publish things of a superstitious nature that would affect the hordes of people with weak or abnormal minds."

One correspondent, a nurse, wrote of a theory of evolution.

"She said she had spent twenty-five years of her life perfecting this theory," declared the professor, "and really believed it."

Not Insane, Only Abnormal.

"While I do not agree with her theory, she is correct from her point of view," said Professor Munsterberg. "I do not consider her mentally diseased or insane. But she is abnormal."

Continuing, the professor said:

"Few people realize how powerful are the so-called medium scientists. Some astrologists present theories so simple and practical that it is a pity they are absurd.

"Some of them believe that all of life is governed by the stars and the planets. Many of these people claim to have letters from Aristides and other great characters of ancient days.

"These strange letters that come to me are from the intellectual underworld. Their writers are unable to think logically, and it is doubtful if they ever think at all.

"These people are confused and unable to live an ordered intellectual life."

CHINESE DEBATERS.

Students at Tech Begin Annual Sessions of Political Discussion.

The Tech Chinese Club, composed of about thirty of the Chinese students at Tech, started their series of debates on the question of Chinese government policies yesterday afternoon. Yesterday the club debated as to whether the provincial governors should be appointed by the central government or chosen by popular vote. The negative side won, deciding that they should not be chosen by central government. For the affirmative, C. C. Cheng and T. K. Yuan, and for the negative, Y. T. Ying and H. Hu debated the question. The judges were H. K. Chow, M. T. Hsu and P. H. Hsu.

Brookline Girl Divorced—Because

SHE WOULDN'T RUN HOUSE
SHE WOULDN'T BOSS SERVANT
SHE WOULDN'T EXPLAIN ABSENCES

MRS. ETHEL HOWARD, IN STRANGE DIVORCE

Mrs. Ethel Howard, a former Boston salesgirl, who married Edward G. Howard, an Ohio rubber magnate, after a six weeks' courtship, was divorced by her husband at Cincinnati because.

She wouldn't boss the servants.

She wouldn't run the house.

She wouldn't explain her absences from home.

She threatened his life with a revolver.

Mrs. Howard, before her marriage to Mr. Howard at Brookline, December 16, 1908, was Ethel Brooks, the divorced wife of Bert Donham. She worked in a downtown store. One day she startled her friends by announcing that she was going to be married, after a romantic courtship of six weeks. Howard was in Boston on a business trip when they met.

"Wouldn't Stay at Home."

"She simply refused to attend to things at home as a wife should," Howard declared. "She wouldn't stay at home during the day, and at night refused to give any account of her movements."

The remarkable case attracted to the courtroom in Cincinnati some of the best known people in the city. Mr. and Mrs. Howard were popular there. Howard is principal owner of the Ohio Rubber Company and is wealthy.

After their marriage she went with her husband to their Cincinnati home. For three years things went smoothly Then there began to be whispers of trouble, and eight months ago Mrs. Howard left home and returned to Allston to live. They had no children.

Mr. Howard filed his suit for divorce December 17, 1912. The ground of divorce was "gross neglect of duty," and the testimony in the courtroom kept the society women present leaning forward in their seats to catch every word.

Mr. Howard in testifying said

For three years my wife has absolutely neglected her duty toward me. She has refused to run the house, so that I often came home at night and found no supper ready and everything in a mess. Sometimes she wasn't there when I arrived. When she came in later I questioned her, but she laughed in my face, or refused to have a word to say.

"Servant Did the Work."

From the first we had a servant who did all the work. All Mrs. Howard had to do was to take charge of things and keep the house running smoothly, but she wouldn't even do that. The maid was pretty capable, or I don't know what would have happened.

There were times when she insulted me, instead of answering my questions. I remember one night in particular, when I came home and found the house dark, the maid on her afternoon out, and not a thing ready to eat. I got something to eat, and then waited for her to come home. She came late in the evening and I met her at the door and wanted to know where she had been.

She broke out and abused me, and when I got mad she drew a revolver and threatened to kill me.

Finally, in October, 1911, I got tired of a life of that sort and broke up housekeeping. I went to boarding, and soon after that my wife left and went back to Boston. This was in May, 1912, and she said she was just going to visit some friends and would be back in a month.

She never came back.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard had no children. Mrs. Howard is now in Covington, Ky. He is living at the Munro Hotel in Cincinnati. The witnesses in the case were Mr Howard, William G. Howard and Mrs. H. B. Heller.

The judge in granting the divorce directed Mr. Howard to pay Mrs. Howard $50 a month beginning May 15. After September 15, 1914, no further alimony will be paid.

Pope Sees U. S. Pilgrims Enter

Convalescing So Rapidly He Walks Unaided to Window to Watch Scene.

ROME, April 26.—Angelo Sarto, aged brother of Pope Pius X., who came to the Vatican when the death of the Pontiff seemed imminent, left for his home in Venice today. This was regarded as the best of evidence that the Pontiff is convalescing rapidly.

The Pope was allowed by his doctors to walk to the window and watch a number of American pilgrims crossing the square of St. Peter's to enter the bronze door of the Vatican for their reception by Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state. Cardinal Merry del Val gave the American visitors the apostolic benediction and blessed the religious objects carried by the pilgrims.

Accompanying the Americans were Bishop Schrambs of Toledo and Monsignor Kennedy, rector of the American College An address written in French and directed to the Pope was left by the American bishop.

SCOTT FUND HELD UP.

Families of Antarctic Victims Are Suffering in Meantime.

LONDON, April 26.—Hundreds of subscribers to the Scott relief fund were indignant today when it became known that the $275,000 raised for the benefit of the families of those who died with Captain Scott on his South Polar expedition, has not been distributed, while the widow and three children of Seaman Evans are living on $3.88 a week from the admiralty. Sir William Soulsby, private secretary to the Lord Mayor, explained to inquirers that the fund was being held until the government moves in the matter of providing pensions for the survivors of Scott's party.

SEE CRIMINAL ACTION FROM EXPOSURES OF MELLEN RULE

Arrests of Men Prominent in Railroad and Financial Circles Looked for as Result of Federal Investigation of the New Haven

Authorities Said to Be Determined on Drastic Steps as Sequel to Frenzied Finance by New England's Big Monopoly

Sensation Expected When Brandeis Continues Cross Examination of Expert Brown at Resumption of Inquiry Tomorrow

CRIMINAL action against men prominent in financial and railroad circles, as a result of the startling irregularities brought to light by the Interstate Commerce Commission investigation into the New Haven Railroad situation, is looked for by those in close touch with the proceedings to date.

The Federal authorities are said to have had the arrest of several such men under consideration for several months. In a number of instances these arrests would have been made before today had it not been for the statute of limitation This does not apply to all the irregularities uncovered, however, and future developments are awaited with interest, when the hearing re-opens tomorrow morning

The amazing methods of high finance exposed by the Federal authorities to date, with the assistance of Louis D. Brandeis, indicate that there must have been something wrong in the New Haven methods. Here are a few of the transactions in question, as testified to at the hearing:

Many Curious Transactions.

Charles S. Mellen, president of the New Haven Railroad, appears to have cleaned up $170,000 by juggling one block of stock back and forth with the New England Navigation Company, of which he is also president.

Another transaction of the same nature, with New York, Westchester and Boston stock held by the Navigation Company, appears to have netted him almost $300,000 by a manipulation of notes.

In this transaction the check for the supposed profits was passed through four banking institutions for the supposed purpose of covering up Mellen's interest in the matter.

Still another stock transaction with the Navigation Company involved some 1,400 shares of Old Colony stock valued at $200,000 and by issuing notes for some mysterious purpose.

A note of memoranda read at the hearing shows that Mellen also gave his note to the Navigation Company in 1911 for $100,000, and later received in return ten $1,000 bills, and the remainder in checks.

"Posted" Millions Down as "Cash."

The New Haven posted $11,500,000 with the J. P. Morgan Company to get secret possession of 66 per cent. of the New York & Westchester and the New York & Portchester Railroads, "paper railroads," and credited it as cash on their own books.

Mellen, in a letter to Oakleigh Thorne and Marsden J. Perry, who termed themselves the Millbrook Company, for obvious purposes, acknowledged that in this transaction he might be placed "dangerously near" the "scheme" with which they were connected.

Thorne and Perry, the latter being the man named by the Governor of Rhode Island to represent him at the Conference of Governors on the New England railroad situation, made a clean $275,000 in the deal.

By an adroit manipulation of Boston & Maine stock, secured through the Mellen-controlled Navigation Company, John L. Billard is credited with making $2,500,000, without using a dollar of his own cash, in a transaction that merely transferred the stock in question back to the New Haven—Mellen to Mellen by a third channel.

Got Stock Through American Express

This stock was secured, largely, from the American Express Company and its allied interests, about the time that company pushed through the contract with the Boston & Maine, which is said to result in the loss to the road of $700,000 a year at the present time.

A $20,000,000 burden was assumed when taking over the Rhode Island Coen the Company through the Providence Securities Company when $2,000,000 is said to have [illegible] the total worth of its original securities.

The indebtedness of the Maine Central was shown to have increased $20,000,000 during the Mellen regime.

Two steamboats originally belonging to the Stonington & Providence Company were bought for $932,000, only to be scrapped two years later.

The Hampden Railroad was built at a cost of $250,000 a mile, the construction work being let to Ralph D. Gillett, president of the Woronoco Construction Company, by Ralph D. Gillett, president of the railroad.

In a purchase of the Ricker Hotel Company property, $1,400,000 was allowed, while Ricker was a member of the board of directors of the railroad.

Thousands of Special Services.

Thousands of dollars for "special services" were paid out to men known to be active at the State House, the amounts being found hidden away under the designation of "other expenses."

A "paper profit" of $7,400,000 was credited on the New Haven books for the supposed purpose of deceiving the stockholders, by selling (?) a block of stock to the Mellen-controlled Navigation Company and transferring it back four days later.

Over $150 a share was paid for the Joy Line stock, at a time when that steamship company was not earning its operating expenses.

More than $50,000,000 have been lost in the purchase of street railways and other transactions.

Meanwhile, those in close touch with the situation assert with great positiveness that the revelations yet to come are fully as sensational as those made during the last week.

And this with criminal action against the men concerned, looked for in the immediate future as a result of the disclosures already made into these extraordinary methods of high finance.

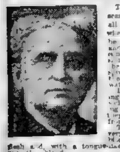
THE BED BUG



The bed bug knows no season. He is active at all times. In summer, when the weather is hot, he is more bothersome, and his bites are not conducive to restful slumber. He belongs to the tribe of disease-spreading insects like the fly, cockroach and water bug.

By their habit of biting all kinds of persons, sick or well, and traveling from one to another, they spread disease germs from person to person.

Their jaws are made very powerful and they bite into their victims' flesh and, with a tongue-like suction tube, draw out the blood.

[illegible] they were originally wood bugs and used their powerful jaws to make [illegible] into the wood and extract the juices.

In the early centuries they were great pests in England, and royal families used to employ men, who were known as "Royal bug catchers," whose duties were to capture the bed bugs that infested the royal couch. As they used to sit and watch until a bug appeared and capture him, it was a very slow and unsatisfactory process, and they very seldom got all the bugs.

Contrast this tedious method with the quick and efficient work that is now done with Martin's Bed Bug Powder, which clears them out by the score and destroys the eggs. Sold by drug and department stores everywhere for 50c and $1 per can. 5c and 10c extra by mail. Eleven different powders for other pests. Name kind when ordering.

FIGHT COMING ON HILL TOWN ORDER

Supporters of Investigation Order to Try to Pass It Over Adverse Report.

The Boston AMERICAN has accused the New Haven Railroad monopoly of having unlawfully contributed thousands of dollars to promote legislation which, if passed, would give the New Haven direct control of the trolley lines in Western Massachusetts.

Does the Legislature want to reveal or conceal the truth?

This is the question which the members of the House of Representatives will act upon this week. The question comes up before that body in the form of an order introduced by Representative John G. Stevens of Marblehead. The order provides for an investigation into the AMERICAN'S charges by a legislative committee with power to summons witnesses, administer oaths and compel the production of books and papers.

The order is on the House calendar and will probably be reached for consideration Tuesday or Wednesday.

Legislative Battle Expected.

One of the biggest legislative battles of the year is expected when the proposition comes up.

The Joint Rules Committee, composed in the majority of the favorites of the Republican State machine, with which the New Haven monopoly has as yet had no occasion to find fault, has reported against the adoption of the order, and gave a reason which is explained below.

Two independent and courageous Democratic members of the committee, Representatives John F. Meaney of Blackstone and Michael J. McEttrick of Boston, the former a former judge and the latter a former congressman, who are among the ablest and most respected men in the House, have dissented from the majority report of the Rules Committee. They will make a determined fight to secure the passage of the order, over the committee's adverse report.

Why Hearing Was Farce.

In this fight, Representatives Meaney and McEttrick and Stevens of Marblehead, the father of the order, will have the support of a number of other prominent members, including Republicans as well as Democrats and Bull Moosers.

Representative Stevens' order for an investigation was referred to the Rules Committee, which referred it to the Street Railways Committee, a majority of the members of which are on record for the Western Trolley Merger bill.

The Rules Committee directed Senator Blanchard, chairman of the Street Railways Committee, to give a public hearing. The committee had no power to summons witnesses, or to compel the production of books and papers. The hearing proved a farce.

Here is what the AMERICAN said at that time editorially:

"The AMERICAN does not propose to give its case to the unofficial Mr. Blanchard.

"When the AMERICAN undertakes to prove these serious charges, it proposes to do so according to the established processes of proof in this country. In the most petty ten-dollar case both parties have a right to examine witnesses under oath and to call for the production of books and papers.

Awaits Real Hearing.

"When the Legislature gives the AMERICAN the opportunity to examine witnesses under oath, particularly President Charles S. Mellen and Vice-President Storrs and Vice-President Byrnes, and to summon such books and papers as may contain evidence to support the charges, then the AMERICAN will prove its case against the New Haven railroad monopoly."

Because of this refusal, the committee on Rules pretends no further action is necessary on the order. The committee's report reads:

"The Joint Committee on Rules report recommending that the order ought not to be adopted (for the reason that the Committee on Street Railways held a hearing at which appeared representatives of the United Hills Towns Association, of many other towns interested, and of the railroad companies; that at said hearing the representatives of the Boston AMERICAN refused to appear to substantiate its charges that the Committee on Street Railways had reported to the Joint Committee on Rules that no further action is necessary)."

"Saltonstall and Sullivan"

How's That for a G. O. P. Ticket?

"Youth, Beauty and Ability"

"Young Guard" of "Old Party" Thinks These Gentlemen Would Run Strong in State Race.

For Governor—John Lee Saltonstall, 35, of Beverly.
For Lieutenant-Governor—E. Mark Sullivan, 35, of Boston.

By ELIAS McQUAID.

What do the Republicans we have with us this morning say about that, for a ticket?

Youth, beauty and ability! These, young Republicans have been saying for a day or two, are the attributes of the ticket they have put forward, tentatively, for the purpose of finding out whether the Old Guard is serious; whether the G. O. P. in Massachusetts is going to take a tumble to itself.

At this writing it appears more than likely that the Democratic candidate for Governor next Fall will be Lieutenant-Governor David I. Walsh of Clinton, Fitchburg and Leominster.

Mr. Walsh will be the handsomest candidate the Democracy of Massachusetts has ever put forward for the Governorship. If Walsh had taken to the stage his photographs would today be best sellers in every Wellesley in the land.

The Lieutenant-Governor, moreover, is an orator of no mean ability, much in demand from the Atlantic Ocean on our front to the Hudson River on our back.

Challenge to the "Old Guard."

Realizing which facts, the Young Republicans of Massachusetts are about to ask the Old Guard to take its choice.

The Crane-Lodge-Weeks machine will be asked to decide between:

1—Waking up.
2—The hemlock cup.

Young Republicans who talk like this declare they will never again learn campaign songs, form marching clubs, go on the stump or even vote, for a Republican whose record or intimate associations indicate that his spirit is altogether the spirit of the interests.

Nor will they again throw their hats in the air, asseverate these asseverators, for a candidate whose record indicates that he has been an earnest and anxious wobbler between progressivism and stand pattism.

They want a candidate who will typify all that WAS good and grand and glorious in the G. O. P.

They want a man who will have nothing to explain.

And they nominate—at this time and subject to correction—John L. Saltonstall of Beverly.

From Pilgrim Stock.

The Saltonstalls go so far back into the history of Massachusetts that the first of them had to buy land from the Indians. These early Saltonstalls settled at Ipswich in Essex County. More generations of Saltonstalls than of any other old family have been represented in the catalogues of Harvard College.

"John L."—mark the punch behind the combination—"John L." studied at Groton and at Harvard. He was graduated from the college in 1900. He is a member of the Somerset, the Tennis and Racquet, the Myopia Hunt, the Automobile, the Exchange, the Eastern Yacht and the New Riding clubs as well as the Harvard Club of New York.

He could keep busy, therefore, motoring from one of his clubs to the next one, but instead he is a business man, member of the firm of Hunt, Saltonstall & Co., dealers in investment securities.

Young—AND handsome—young and handsome Mr. Saltonstall has served two years in the State Legislature. While his record on Beacon Hill has not been as progressive as Progressives might desire, neither has it been reactionary. It IS recalled—and respectfully put forward as one of the marks greatly in his favor in connection with the nomination now under discussion—that when Speaker Cushing assigned the young blueblood to the Committee on Street Railways, three seasons ago, the Saltonstall boy said "no, and I thank you."

"Strange Bird in the Nest."

"Bally good committee, 'Jack'" urged Grawfton.

"Quite so, old top," said Saltonstall—they belong to the same clubs, y'understand—"but you know my people are in street railways, old fellow, and I couldn't think of it."

So the Speaker gave him some other good committee and the Stand Patters shook their heads doubtfully and wondered what strange bird was this that had found its way into the nest. They are still wondering; an indication, John L's friends say in talking about him to the political reporters, that there are no strings on Saltonstall.

Being a blueblood, it took Saltonstall some time to become acquainted in the smoking rooms at the State House. He had to demonstrate that there was nothing "stuck up" about him. This he did while at the same time refraining from slapping chaps on the back, learning to chew tobacco, or going in for extreme profanity.

As a legislator, Mr. Saltonstall interested himself especially in the fish and game laws, his great achievement in this direction being an act to protect wild duck during the mating season. Captain Bill Gifford objected that Saltonstall does all his hunting in North Carolina—an ugly charge which our hero did not deny—but the House listened to Saltonstall and wild duck were permitted to go on with their love making unannoyed by "sportsmen."

In the Diplomatic Service.

When Saltonstall came out from Harvard, with a trunkful of degrees and things, he went abroad for a year to consider what to do about putting the world right. The next year he spent at the American Embassy in London, as Ambassador Choate's private secretary—the Choates being somewhat of an ancient Essex County house themselves—and during that time was a member of the Choate household.

So, in every respect, these young Republicans say, Saltonstall "measures up" and would make a corking candidate for a party which desires to look alive.

It has been suggested, further, that a likely running mate for Saltonstall would be E. Mark Sullivan, since 1907 one of Asa French's assistant United States District Attorneys.

Strangely enough Mr. Sullivan, like Mr. Saltonstall, is a native of Ipswich town in Essex. But the Sullivans do not go back to 1630 in Massachusetts. At that time the Sullivans were doing well in Kerry—where all the real Sullivans come from—and Mark's forbears did not begin to think of the United States until some time after the Cunard Line got going.

"THE TICKET."

Above, John L. Saltonstall. Below, E. Mark Sullivan.

Although they were both born in Ipswich, and although they are the two handsomest young men in the Republican politics of Massachusetts—their friends would strike out the word Republican and call them the handsomest two among all parties—their careers are otherwise unlike.

When Saltonstall went to Groton, Mark Sullivan marched daily to the Manning High School at Ipswich.

While Saltonstall was learning his ab, ab, abs at Harvard, "E. Mark" was studying at Boston College. When Saltonstall went to London to help "Joe" Choate keep us on good terms with our cousins across the water (applause), E. Mark was studying law at the Harvard Law School and getting in line for his present place in the Federal building.

Wives from York State, Too!

So much and all is favorable.

On the other hand it is urged that Mr. Sullivan must first stand up before everybody and explain what the "E" stands for in E. Mark Sullivan.

And on the same hand it is insisted that both young gentlemen will be pushed to the very extreme of their resourceful and combined abilities to explain satisfactorily and successfully what in time they had to go to York State for, to pick them two wives—one apiece—when all around us are troops and legions of the fairest and loveliest damsels who ever lolled in limousines, as Richard Harding Davis might say, or hoofed it along Tremont street rubbering at the window shows.

However——

"Saltonstall and Sullivan!"

Think it over—those of you who are Republicans— and watch out for small bills and further announcements in the daily press.

500 MORE CITY MEN SEEK RAISE

Skilled Laborers to Ask Mayor for Wage Advance Early in June.

In raising the salaries of all city laborers to $2.50 per day, Mayor Fitzgerald will be confronted with the problem of pacifying nearly 500 more skilled employes of the city who are preparing to submit demands for an increase of wages.

The city laborers' increase is scheduled to go into effect June 1. As soon as it is in force, the skilled laborers now receiving $2.50 per day, are preparing to demand a proportionate increase.

These men, most of whom are employed in the public works and the park and recreation departments, contend that their work is more difficult and requires more skill than that of the average laborer and that for that reason their services should be rewarded by more money than the ordinary city laborer receives.

In preparing for the increase, the Mayor has considered this point with relation to the employes of the ferry division, but it is in order that there may be a general standardization of wages that the men are preparing to submit their demands to the Mayor immediately upon his return from Panama.

M'DEVITT MAY FIGHT FOR SEAT

Norfolk Senator Suspended in Bribery Case Declares He Will Not Apologize.

State Senator John J. McDevitt "will not apologize" to the Massachusetts Senate for his bribery charges as a result of which he was suspended and reprimanded six weeks ago. His friends declare that his suspension may yet be taken to the courts for action and that he will seek to establish the truth of his charge.

Senator McDevitt's suspension expires May 1, but a condition of his reinstatement was that he apologize. His constituents in Quincy are wondering now just what will happen when May 1 comes, and the Senator seeks to resume his seat on Beacon Hill.

"The truth needs no apology," was Senator McDevitt's answer when an AMERICAN reporter asked him what his course would be.

"There will be no apology," he added.

The Senator has repeatedly contended that his charges of attempted bribery were the truth. He has been invited to speak on the evening of May 1, before the Hendricks Club of Chelsea, and it is expected that he will go to the Senate that morning prepared to defend himself at the evening meeting if the Senate refuses to allow him to take his seat.

Senator McDevitt's difficulty with the Senate resulted from his statement that he had been offered $300 for adopting a certain course on a matter before the Legislature. He made the charges in a speech before the Wollaston Citizens' Association, February 26. The Legislature at once took action and ordered an investigation. The Committee on Rules held two hearings and called for Senator McDevitt. At the second hearing Senator McDevitt named Representative Buckley of Dorchester as the man who attempted to bribe him.

HAS SOMEONE BLUNDERED IN RHODE ISLAND'S STRANGE HEADLESS MURDER MYSTERY?

Deslovers' Discharge Ordered as State Has Failed to Bring Him to Bar Within Statutory Limit

WOONSOCKET, R. I., April 26.—"Has somebody blundered in the case of Henry Deslovers and the 'headless body' murder mystery?"

This question is now being asked, following the public realization that Deslovers has been kept in Cranston jail three weeks more than the six months prescribed by the statutes for a murder defendant to be brought to trial after he had pleaded to the indictment.

Henry Deslovers pleaded not guilty, on October 7 last, to the indictment charging him with the murder of Angele Parmentier, the Woonsocket woman whose headless body, bound with ropes, was found in the Blackstone river on the previous June 25.

The Supreme Judicial Court, by a vote of three judges to two, decided that as Deslovers is entitled under the statute to his discharge, he should have a hearing April 18 on a writ of habeas corpus. But Attorney-General Rice, who had opposed the writ from the first, secured a postponement of Deslovers' release in order that he might re-argue on the original writ.

The Attorney-General has filed his reargument and Deslovers is still in Cranston jail.

Witnesses have been brought into the State, held in jail and then released after being paid a sum of money. In all, some $5,000 has been spent by the State.

Deslovers has been deprived of his liberty since June 30, 1912. Comment is made that if Deslovers is innocent he is being treated unjustly, and that, if he is guilty, he is at least entitled to a speedy trial.

John J. Fitzgerald of counsel for Deslovers said today:

"It is on record where I have protested against the case being reassigned for trial so often. The last time that was done I objected vigorously, but to no avail. We can show that we wanted to try this case within the allotted time, but were not allowed to.

"Now that the Supreme Court has handed down a decision favoring our client, there is nothing for us to do but await the motion of the Attorney General, which will be presented to the Supreme Court."

Suspect Still in Jail.

The "headless body" case was one of the most shocking in Rhode Island's criminal history.

On the morning of June 25, last, Eugene Jacobs of Dame's Grove found the body of a woman, with the head missing, in the Blackstone River. The head had been cut off with a blunt instrument. The arms and legs had been lashed about with rope. A fifty-pound stone was attached to keep the corpse from floating, but it rose to the surface despite the weight and was found.

A week later the recovery of a bundle of clothing in the Blackstone River established the identity of the headless woman as Angele Parmentier, also known as Mrs. Angele Parmentier-Delmar.

She was a French woman who had been living at No. 367 Cumberland street, along the river front. This was the home of Henry Deslovers, a big Belgian mill operative. The woman had been known as Deslovers' wife.

The pitiful story of Angele Parmentier was gradually brought to light. She was born in France, the land of roses and sunshine. She loved a young soldier named E. Delmar. His initials were said to have been tattooed on one of her arms.

Finally she married Delmar, but they evidently fell apart, for three years ago she met Henry Deslovers at Roubaix, France. Deslovers did not know the girl was married.

Woman Missing Three Weeks.

They fell in love. She had friends in this country. Friends in Providence, talking of the unfortunate woman, say she said to Deslovers:

"We will go away to America. I know people there."

They emigrated, appeared in Woonsocket and lived together. In February, 1912, the woman ran away, but Deslovers found her in Pawtucket and persuaded her to return with him.

The police found that Angele Parmentier had not been seen here since June 4, three weeks before her headless body was found in the river. The police then built up this theory:

That Deslovers and the woman had quarreled.

That she started to leave him again.

That he killed her in the night, cut off her head, tied the body, weighted it with a stone and cast it into the river, which flowed not over forty feet from the Cumberland street cottage.

That he disposed of the head somewhere.

Deslovers stoutly maintained innocence from the first. He admitted that Angele Parmentier had gone. But he did not for one moment admit that the headless body was that of the missing woman.

Furthermore, he stuck to the explanation that he went fishing June 4 and that while he was gone, Angele Parmentier took $48 of his money, all her clothing except the oldest garments and left without notice. He said she had probably gone back to her girlhood home in Roubaix, France.

Governor Pothier, who became actively interested in the case, cabled to Roubaix. Angele Parmentier had not been seen there.

Deslovers was arrested as a suspect, was held for the Grand Jury, was indicted for murder on September 16, last, and pleaded not guilty on October 7.

Four Times Postponed.

Since then trial has been assigned four times and four times put off.

The trial was postponed from November 11 to January 27 to February 10 to April 21.

The Supreme Court says that one of the earlier postponements was at Deslovers' request, but that the last postponement, from February 10 to April 21, was against Deslovers' protest.

On April 7 the statutory six months expired. The next day Eugene J. Jalbert and John J. Fitzgerald, counsel for Deslovers, petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus, so that Deslovers might be released.

Attorney General Rice argued against the writ being issued, but the Supreme Court decided that it should be issued.

There was a hearing on the writ on April 18. It was expected, in view of the court's opinion, that Deslovers would be freed. But Attorney General Rice appeared in opposition, asking a postponement in order that he might reargue against the writ. He asked an opportunity to state where, in his opinion, the Court had erred in issuing the writ.

The postponement was granted and the attorney general has filed his reasons for a re-argument.

Meanwhile the fourth assignment of the trial fell on April 21. The Attorney-General appeared before Judge Rathbun in the Superior Court and asked that the trial be passed for the fourth time as he was to file his reargument reasons with the Supreme Court on the twenty-third. The trial was passed again, with the statement that it would be held in a fortnight.

It now rests with the Supreme Court to render another decision on the petition for reargument. Meanwhile Deslovers is still in Cranston jail.

ONE SWEET SONG IN WARD 21 NOW

Fire Alarm Boxes Factor in Bringing About New Political Combination.

Out in Ward 21 there is considerable gossip in political circles over the alignment of different political forces that promises to "produce the goods" in the next campaign, as former Representative James T. Kenny invariably says when "pumphandling" some of his constituents.

Kenny is one of the component parts of the "Forces" and is making no bones about it either, according to "Fiddler" Dempsey of the group up around Cherry alley, where they make and unmake political leaders and where the babies go to sleep in their cradles with their fists doubled.

When Kenny had the signal honor of representing the ward for ONE year in the House he meandered up and down the ward, from east to west, etc., and admired the magnificent works of art. He caught a glimpse of the five columns of architecture in the ward, Tuscan, Ionic, Doric, Corinthian and Composite.

What happened is best described by "Fiddler," who deposes that Kenny petitioned and secured the installation of additional fire alarm boxes in the ward.

"[illegible] one act," interjected Fiddler, who is a relative of one of the leaders of the Ward Seventeen Tammany Club, warmed the hearts of his constituents.

"But the five columns of architecture—which are Greek to me—was the argument Kenny used to influencing Fire Commissioner Cole to give the ward the boxes. Some of them have yet to be 'pulled in,' which speaks volumes for the safety of the district from fire.

"And then we have in the ward a new force for improvements in the person of the inimitable 'Jerry' Watson, late of Jim Timilty's bailiwick, who is one of those connected with the new alignment in the ward.

"Jerry, as everybody knows or should know, is a member of the City Council, and is anxious to get the Music Commission or somebody else with plenipotentiary powers to carry out the project inaugurated by his bosom friend, Kenny, of erecting a bandstand in the centre of Honeysuckle Hill, known as Washington Park.

"But why dilate further," said Fiddler. "I have aspirations for the Senate myself, and Joe Downey of the club at Warren and Dudley streets might think I'm boosting Kenny's game for emolument, or something like that, in the political game."

Here "Fiddler" left his confreres to call up "Roxbury 50" to register a complaint against a juvenile who interfered with his ("Fiddler's") passage down Warren street earlier in the evening.

Like other wards TWENTY-ONE boasts of eateries and beaneries where "straight dope" on the new alignment in its confines may be secured. And James T. Kenny and Councilor Watson, according to gossip there, are the prime factors in bringing together the different political forces.

Moral: It pays to get fire alarm boxes and bandstands for musical purposes if you wish to prosper politically.

BROKER DAVIE RUNS LIBRARY

Youthful Financier, Cheered by Sunlit Cell, Takes New Lease of Life.

One of these days [illegible] whom State street [illegible] as the boy broker [illegible] time has been [illegible] for five years for larceny—will write a [illegible] thrill for the end of every act and a score of thrills for the [illegible].

And, some of his former [illegible] said yesterday, [illegible] able to get the local [illegible] drama by turning back the pages of his experience. He will never [illegible] his workshop.

The latest about young Mr. Davie—he is twenty-six now—is that Sheriff John Quinn has just made him librarian of the Charles street jail.

Davie four months ago was a petitioner for pardon at the hands of Governor Foss and the council. He was then a prisoner in the House of Correction at Deer Island. Reports were current that he had steadily lost flesh, and that he appeared to be touched with tuberculosis.

There had recently been a public protest against the pardon methods of Beacon Hill and, in the case of Davie, the authorities moved carefully. He was examined by physicians. Following this examination his petition was dismissed.

Looks After 600 Volumes.

Four weeks later the Board of Prison Commissioners ordered the transfer of the "boy broker" from Deer Island to the Suffolk jail in Charles street.

Folks who have visited the jail lately report that Davie has been given one of the south side cells, which are especially favored with sunlight and air.

Said Sheriff Quinn last night:

"He certainly shows no signs of tuberculosis, and if he had I should not have kept him here a minute. The place for him, then, would be the State sanatorium at Rutland. I should ask for his transfer not only on Davie's account, but as a matter of precaution on behalf of the other prisoners.

"When he came to us, however, just before the first of February, Davie was in a condition commonly described as 'run down.' He was a nervous invalid. His stomach was disordered.

"I gave him such a cell as a prisoner in that condition ought to have and then I assigned him to the care of the books. I should hardly dignify the berth by calling him the 'librarian,' but he does look after our library of 600 volumes.

"The young man has shown a real interest in his work, which, I should say, has a tendency further to improve his condition. He has lately been recovering some of the volumes. In other cases has been sewing loose leaves.

"He is doing well physically. He seems to be contented, and he never makes a complaint. He would like out-of-doors work, he tells me, and I am about to turn him out upon the lot to plant vegetables and have general care of our little garden. Some of the other prisoners will work with him. Davie is, of course, the 'longest-term' man we have. Nobody is sent to the jail for a longer term than two years; very few for that long. The average run of sentences is from three to six months."

When Davie asked for a pardon last November District Attorney Pelletier said that only for his youth he would have been sentenced to State prison instead of the House of Correction.

Certainly few Boston boys have had a career more meteoric than the librarian of the Charles street jail.

Born in the village of Hyde Park—now the Twenty-sixth Ward of Boston—Davie left the high school at 16 to enter the real estate business.

At seventeen he was a bond clerk, with the fine old house of R. L. Day & Co. He had reached State street.

At eighteen he had taken a responsible place with the firm of Wiggin & Elwell.

Real State Street "Boss."

At nineteen he was established in a suite of offices at No. 53 State street, and on his own account. Clerks, stenographers and telegraphers called him "boss." Davie had "arrived."

He was the boy broker of Boston.

And of course he wasn't old enough for all this. Success and notoriety turned his head. He speculated and he won. He speculated and he lost. Men and women—mostly women—respected and trusted him.

When the crash came—and he had run away to Rio de Janeiro—the total losses of those who had believed in him were said to amount to $250,000. Indicted on several counts of larceny, he pleaded guilty on one, November 8, 1911, and was sent up for five years. One year later—having missed the State Prison—he was seeking a pardon.

Only two or three visitors have called to see him in Charles street.

One comes every week.

On the same day of the week and at the same hour—the one day that she can come and the earliest moment—one of these visitors is at the door.

Society sees in this young prisoner of Charles street a youth who was false to many trusts and who ought to be punished—for his own good, for the protection of the public and as an example to others.

GERMS AND WASTE ARE WATER PERILS

Tech Expert Sounds Warning Note as to Supply for New England Communities.

[illegible] are "bugs"—real live, [illegible] "bugs"—in every drop of water New Englanders drink.

This is one of the "water facts" about New England which Dr. John Norton, the famous Tech bacteriologist, emphasized in an interview with a Sunday AMERICAN reporter. Dr. Norton is making a thorough investigation of New England's water supply. Here are some of his pointers on the water which you [illegible] every day:

Water is often chock full of bacilli, which are often harmful.

Water seldom has less than five germs to a single drop. So that every swallow you take means gulping down hundreds of bacteria.

Boston water is excellent.

Bostonians consume water to the extent of 100 gallons per person each day.

Newton water is the purest of all, though its standard has fallen in recent years.

Cambridge water "could be better."

Lynn water is "poor."

Some towns along the Merrimack river are on the "doubtful list."

Many Massachusetts towns ought to have their water supply examined frequently.

People generally are ignorant of [illegible] water facts.

[illegible] water may be laden with [illegible].

[illegible] take a chance on drinking [illegible] not necessarily be sent [illegible]. You may survive [illegible] again, you might not.

[illegible] should use water more [illegible].

Filters Are Condemned.

Dr. Norton condemns severely the SMALL FILTERS used both in cities and in [illegible] which are attached to water faucets. This system, he asserts, is [illegible] criminal and causes [illegible] that are a menace to [illegible] any community.

Dr. Norton said:

"[illegible] and intestinal diseases come [illegible] water. The germs which give these diseases can be detected with the microscope.

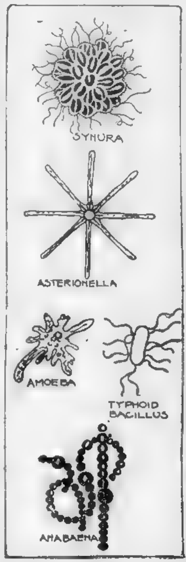
"The presence of sewage does not necessarily mean there are typhoid germs or any other kind of dangerous bacilli and I tell my students they may drink water so affected for 100 years without being harmed, but the next year might see a whole community affected with death-dealing disease.

"When I discover an unusually large quantity of salt and ammonia in [illegible] water I know it has been contaminated and that sewage from some drain or vault is getting in.

"Of the New England water supply as a whole I should say it is superior to what one finds in the middle west where rivers and streams must be depended upon, but the farmers and others have become somewhat indifferent to possible contamination, and for this reason if for no other there should be greater publicity on all health matters.

"As to the Boston water supply I will say that it is excellent and needs little filtering."

IF you find any of these "bugs" in your drinking water don't be alarmed. They are all harmless except that little wiggly one labelled "Typhoid." The "bug" at the top gives the water a cucumber taste. The Asterionella gives off a fishy odor. The one at the bottom tints the water a bluish-green.



RAP POLICE WORK IN SOUTH BOSTON

Leaders in Move for Mass Meeting Charge Favoritism in Department.

The [illegible] of South Boston are planning a mass meeting to demand from Police Commissioner O'Meara publicity in the handling of the 200 police officers paid to protect life and property in the [illegible].

They charge that so much secrecy now exists that [illegible] cannot take ordinary precautions against burglars and those [illegible]. A robbery may occur in the next house and a neighbor not know about it [illegible] to act for their own [illegible].

Several of the officers say there is too much favoritism in both divisions.

One officer at the Broadway station, a property owner, is one of the favored [illegible] of the department. It is further charged that other patrolmen, in Division 6, have been given assurances of promotion in return for stool pigeon work on other officers.

Complaint is also made that recently at a fire on West Broadway, next to a saloon, the father of the owner of the saloon was knocked down by the police and injured, when he tried to get to his son's place of business. Since then, because of a complaint made at the station by the son, his place of business has been constantly watched as though he was conducting a place against the law.

Another business man on Broadway was told to get out of his place of business immediately after closing time and was refused the privilege of sitting down in his own store. This man says he is being persecuted.

SALARY GRABBERS ON BEACON HILL ARE UNEASY; FIN. COM. SHOWING UP EXTRA PAY

Republicans Oppose Francis X Tyrell for Chairman of the Economy and Efficiency Commission

REPUBLICANS in the employ of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are almost of one mind in their hope that Governor Foss will not [illegible] Francis X. Tyrell chairman of the Economy and Efficiency Commission.

Tyrell is the young Chelsea attorney who has been acting chairman of the Commission since Norman H. White resigned to run for Congress.

Public attention was directed only the other day to the work of the State's Fin. Com. when the Commission turned up the State Commissioner of Weights and Measures and had him dismissed from the service, charged with padding his expense accounts.

A considerable amount of under the surface [illegible] of the Massachusetts Fin. Com. has followed the dismissal of Palmer. Republicans who rejoiced a year or two ago at every instance of municipal [illegible] picked up by the Boston Fin. Com. have been prompt to say since [illegible] that the Commission on Economy [illegible] might well be in better [illegible] than the dismissal in disgrace of so [illegible] a public servant as "Dan" Palmer.

[illegible] one of these critics [illegible] John White [illegible] when they [illegible] his expense ac[illegible] [illegible] of course that [illegible] the goods.

Worked for $2,000.

[illegible] Commissioner on Weights and Measures. [illegible] of the national [illegible] working for [illegible] $2,000 a year. [illegible]

Palmer was the first [illegible] result [illegible] the first [illegible] of the State Fin. Com.

And, since the turning up of Palmer, some of the men who try to steer things have been more and more determined that Tyrell must not be the chairman of the Commission, must not direct its work.

The Commission has [illegible] more for [illegible] increase in salary [illegible] Assistant Secretary of State [illegible] Boynton.

"Soft" Overtime Money

The Commission has [illegible] spike in a movement for [illegible] increase in salary for detectives of the State police.

Further, the Commission has [illegible] ing a [illegible] "extra compensation" for [illegible] and employes.

"Extra compensation" for clerks and stenographers and experts on the payrolls of the State cost last year not less than $25,000.

This was in addition to [illegible] cost of "extra clerical hire" [illegible] hire represents the [illegible] demands of rush seasons [illegible] women are brought in [illegible] extra [illegible]

[illegible] After [illegible]

$2,000 Extra Compensation.

In looking into the matter the Finance Commission folks have found that many employes of State departments are employed on the side by other departments. They have urged that the Register should make this fact clear; that cross indexes in the official payroll should show exactly how many jobs are held by one person and how much he gets.

Again this year the Legislature was asked to raise the pay of Boynton—Assistant Secretary of State from $3,000 to $4,000.

The increase had been recommended in turn by Secretaries Olin and Langtry, Republicans, and by Frank J. Donahue, Democrat.

There appeared to be no opposition. Boynton is one of the most efficient men in the public service. He is first aid to everybody. His merit is acknowledged on every side.

In the ordinary routine of State House affairs, however, the Boynton bill was referred to the Commission on Economy and Efficiency and the commissioners looked into it.

And what did they find?

They found that in one year—the year ending July 12, last—Mr. Boynton collected $2,000 from the Commonwealth as "extra compensation."

Boynton collected $1,000 for his codification of the election laws. He got $500 more for work "in connection with the direct primaries." And there was $200 more in "work in connection with [illegible]."

So that, in one year, the Assistant Secretary of State was paid $5,000, an amount equal to the salary of his chief.

The Commission on Economy and Efficiency found that there could be no objection to paying Assistant Secretary Boynton $4,000 a year instead of $3,000.

Police Seek Raise.

They recommended, however, that the Boynton salary bill should provide that this $4,000 a year should be "payment in full for the assistant secretary's services to the State"—in other words, that there should be no more extra compensation.

And then what happened?

What happened was that the petition was withdrawn, and the Legislature will not have to bother with the Boynton bill. One man, at least, thinks more of his chances than a $1,000 increase in salary.

[illegible], the State Finance Commission has directed attention to what [illegible] for all the world like a wholesale salary grab on the part of the detectives of the State Police. It is hardly likely that these detectives will get away with it at this time.

The petitioner for this legislation is Arthur J. Keating, himself a State Police detective. (The official name is District Police.)

The Keating bill provides that:

The annual salary of the Captain of the District Police (William H. Proctor), WHO SHALL RANK NEXT TO THE DEPUTY CHIEF IN THE DETECTIVE DEPARTMENT, shall be $2,[illegible].

The annual salary of the Chief [illegible] (Charles Frank Rice) shall be $[illegible].

The annual salary of all other members shall be $1,500 for the first year of service and all members who have served in the department five years or more shall receive an annual salary of $2,000; [illegible] years $1,800, two years $1,700 and one year $1,600.

More Than One Salary.

The fact speedily developed that the great majority of the District Police detectives have been in the service for at least five years. Their present salary limit being $1,500, this bill proposed a 33 1-3 per cent. increase at one jump, boosting all the five-year men from $1,500 to $2,000.

This situation was [illegible] before the Legislature [illegible] light. The increases asked for would cost several thousand dollars. In the present condition of the State finances and the present [illegible] to the State tax, the outlook for the detectives is not so [illegible] as it may have seemed a few weeks ago.

Saying which it may also be pointed out, in passing, that the maximum salary of a Boston policeman, who works at least as many hours and who knows at least as much about detecting as the average State detective, is $1,400 per annum.

Cases have not been rare in the public service where one man had several titles and the salaries to go with them. The Economy and Efficiency Board was in every case [illegible] to consolidate such boards.

Dr. Edwin P. Harvey, for instance, resigned the other day, having reached the age of seventy, as [illegible] secretary of the Board of Registration in Medicine.

The salary, if you looked it up, was $2,500 a year—not a major place as places go in the public service. If you looked further, however, you found that Dr. Harvey was also secretary of the Board of Registration of Nurses. Here his salary was $1,500. So that Dr. Harvey was paid at least $4,000 per annum.

Investigation will show, as it early showed the Economy and Efficiency Commission, that Dr. Harvey [illegible] the work of both secretaryships in one [illegible] so [illegible] crowded but that a single clerk was all he had in the way of assistance.

Begins to Accomplish.

The Commission on Economy and Efficiency [illegible]. It has begun [illegible] things. It is demonstrating the wisdom of its promoters.

Hence it may be expected by the public [illegible] that every [illegible] possible will be done to back the [illegible] Commissioners. It will have [illegible] from now on for every desire it [illegible] for life and vigor. Its recommendations will [illegible] opposition from [illegible] quarters.

[illegible] Democrats, Progressive Republicans and plain Progressives hope the man appointed to Norman White's [illegible] be another Norman White, a [illegible] Francis Tyrell.

Norman White, reluctantly laying down his work as chairman of the new commission because he felt it his duty to [illegible] the Progressive fight in the Thirteenth Congress District, said to the Governor at that time that, in his opinion, the man to take his place there was [illegible]. Under ordinary circumstances, therefore, [illegible] would expect the Governor to name Tyrell for promotion.

Find Cause for Worry.

[illegible] few men in the public service who find cause for worry in what happened to Daniel C. Palmer, Commissioner of Weights and Measures, [illegible] work everything they can reach to keep Tyrell out of the chairmanship of the State's Fin. Com.

The same few gentlemen will hope—[illegible] go as far as they under-the-surface can to see that the new man on the board will not be a Norman White or a Francis Tyrell.

And the average man will do well to have an eye on the situation and to give his support to the State Fin. Com. quite as public opinion supported the Boston Fin. Com. when it was doing things.

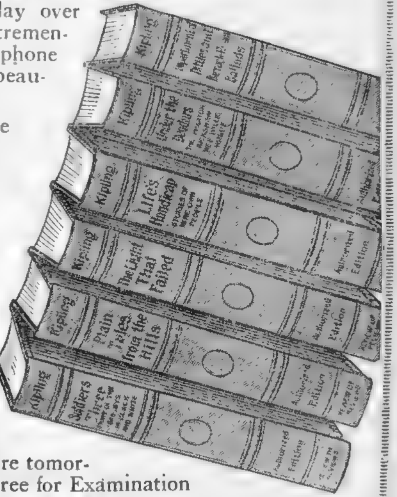
FORCED TO CONTINUE THE "O. HENRY CLUB"

UNTIL 5:30 P. M. TOMORROW ONLY



To avoid disappointment to hundreds—we must extend this offer one day. Yesterday over 1,200 people accepted this great bargain opportunity. We were not prepared for such a tremendous and enthusiastic appreciation of the great O. Henry-Kipling offer. There were 227 telephone orders alone and hundreds of people came into the store or sent the coupon to see these beautiful O. Henry books and to get the 6-volume set of Kipling FREE.

As a consequence, everyone could not be waited on. Therefore, in fairness to all, we will accept orders for these books until 5:30 P. M. tomorrow. But sharp at that hour, this offer will be finally and positively withdrawn.

Now or Never

Your Very Last Chance to Get This Kipling FREE

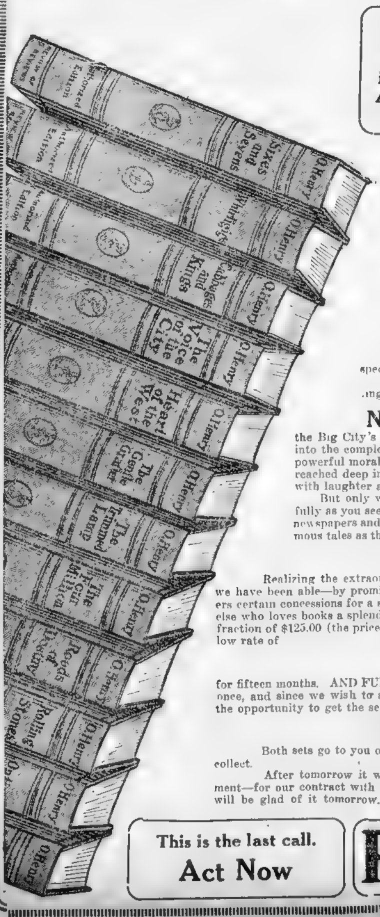
Remember, it is not necessary to send any money—or to place yourself under any obligation—Merely tear off and mail the coupon below today—telephone or come into the store tomorrow—and get the 6 volumes of Kipling FREE, which are yours without a penny of cost, and get Free for Examination the 274 fascinating, dashing, brilliant stories by

274 O. Henry Stories in Twelve Attractive Volumes

O. Henry

In 12 Beautiful Volumes

179 Kipling Stories in Six Attractive Volumes



One edition of O. Henry was offered at $125.00, and every set sold before publication on the bare announcement. Now comes YOUR chance to have sent to you on approval, at our expense, the complete writings of O. Henry, and secure them, if satisfactory, for less than one-eighth of $125.00, and pay for them at the low rate of only $1.00 a month for a few months. Send for the books, they are yours for the asking, or come into the store and look them over at your leisure.

Don't Delay Another Moment

Already 35,921 Sets Have Been Distributed

This has become the biggest book success ever made in so short a time. Yet, at midnight tomorrow, our contract with the publishers definitely ends and this special distribution of O. Henry's complete works must cease. At midnight tomorrow this chance will be ended.

Complete sets will be sent on approval at our expense. O. Henry has arrived—has been recognized as America's Master Story Teller—as the American Kipling—and Prince of Entertainers. Read a few of his stories and see why.

NO OTHER MAN EVER KNEW

the Big City's seething millions as O. Henry did—no other man could gaze so clearly into the complex problems and mysteries of real life and see crystalized there a great powerful moral to be immortalized, or a charming romance to be depicted in story. He reached deep into the human heart and wrote "lives" as he saw them—lives filled with laughter and tears, interwoven with romance and comedy.

But only when you have met the characters he visualized in print—smiled wistfully as you see that their characters are so like your own —will you ever realize why newspapers and magazines are offering big sums for the privilege of printing these famous tales as they appear in this new authorized edition.

THE GAY, CYNICAL DANCE OF LIFE.

Into the gay, changing, cynical, nightly life dance of men and women he has put humor and pathos—he has portrayed it in all its joys and stern realities. The flat dweller of the City, the commuter from the Suburbs, the clubman of Commonwealth avenue and the stenographer of State street, all meet in O. Henry's cosmopolitan pages. He analyzed their life story and turned the limelight upon them. Into the streets and commons and among the crushing stream of humanity he went—and then painted what he saw with a master's hand. No matter who you are or what fate has decreed for you, somewhere in O. Henry's absorbing pages you will find your own story tucked away.

HOW WE CAN MAKE THIS OFFER

Realizing the extraordinary popularity of O. Henry and desiring to add to the ever-increasing public interest in our book business, we have been able—by promising to spread the news that at last O. Henry's complete works have been collected—to secure from the publishers certain concessions for a short time introductory sale that positively closes to morrow at midnight. This will give you and everyone else who loves books a splendid bargain. Therefore we are not only able to place on your library shelves a complete set of O. Henry for a fraction of $125.00 (the price charged for the only other subscription set in existence), but to make it possible for you to pay for it at the low rate of for fifteen months. AND FURTHER THAN ALL THIS, inasmuch as we have to turn the sale of O. Henry back to the publishers at once, and since we wish to secure not only YOUR immediate decision, but all others who have been amazed by this real bargain, we give the opportunity to get the set of Kipling FREE to those who sign and return the coupon at once, or bring it into the store.

SEND BACK BOTH SETS IF YOU LIKE.

Both sets go to you on approval at our expense. If, after inspection, you are not highly delighted, send them back, all charges collect.

After tomorrow it will be too late. We cannot repeat this offer. We cannot sell these books again under this low price arrangement—for our contract with the publishers prohibits it. Tomorrow the sale closes absolutely and definitely. So be prompt today and you will be glad of it tomorrow. Send the coupon NOW

This is the last call.

LIQUIDATION A FEATURE OF THE STOCK MARKET AT THE CLOSE OF WEEK

Bears Continued to Raid, and Support Was Feeble or Lacking—Sentiment Was Gloomy, and Lower Prices Were Predicted by Most Professional Traders.

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, April 26.—Stocks declined still further at the last market session of the week, but considering how depressed sentiment is in almost every quarter, losses averaged less than might have reasonably been expected. It was remarked that all selling was not of the short variety, and that not only was real liquidation in process, but some things indicated it was by interests of large calibre

W. H. ROSS

As soon as the New York market opened it was put under pressure, and support then offered was soon withdrawn. The subsequent decline was sharp and included most issues on the list Stop orders were caught in a number of cases. Union Pacific went below 150, Steel to 60 and Reading below 160

Chesapeake & Ohio made a low record. Bears continued their raid on Chicago & Northwestern.

The weakest issues were found among industrials. American Tobacco had slumped more than six points at the close and Sears-Roebuck more than four

The rally in Rumely issues was an interesting feature. Both common and preferred ended more than two points higher, although the latter had broke to 49 during the morning.

Near the close in New York there was enough of a rally to carry most issues above the low for the day. That market was more active than it had been at a week-end for a long time.

In Boston coppers receded with the marked exception of Wolverine, which closed 1¼ higher. When Copper Range fell to 42, its closing quotation, it was at the lowest price in a decade. Boston Elevated was a point weaker, and there was little business or change in Mellen stocks.

Stock markets were dull and lacking in interest during the week, and buying by the public was too meagre to be of consequence as a support. Investors as a class seemed to be waiting for better bargains. The consensus of professional opinion appears to be that they will have a chance to get them. Most habitual followers of the market, in fact, look for lower prices. There would not seem to be any bottom to the present descent, if bearish sentiment was a trustworthy thumb. Fortunately it is not

Money Is Picking Up.

Money is accumulating fast and rates are easier, but bankers are using the utmost scrutiny in making loans. It is not as easy to borrow as a plenitude of funds might lead anyone to believe. That is as true of Europe as of this country. Hoarded cash is coming out very slowly abroad, and the past week has been a period of more or less renewal there of the war scare, which began months ago with the conflict between Turkey and the Balkan allies. The situation in Europe has vastly improved, but the logic of a situation does not always overcome a state of nerves.

Trade has slackened in the United States and business men in all lines are getting ready to adjust themselves to a revolution in fiscal policy. Organized labor has not deemed anything like that as being necessary on its part. Employers, however, are not sure but that even wage earners will have to give the matter heed before long

It is hard to convince capital that real retrenchment is to be conducted solely on its side

Will Wages Stay Up?

Opponents of tariff revision are asking if it will be possible to keep wages up when the cost of food, clothing and all the necessities of life are reduced. They are inquiring if a mechanic can continue to get sixty cents an hour or so for his labor and have sirloin steak cut to fifteen cents a pound, $20 suits to $10, $3 shoes to $2, and so on, ad libatum.

The framers of the Underwood bill are confident that after readjustment is accomplished American manufacturers will find in extended markets abroad enough of a field to recompense them for what they will lose at home through foreign competition.

A great deal has been promised, and the American people have given President Wilson and his party a full, free and fair chance to deliver cheaper goods to them. But nothing was said in any platform about cutting wages. If that is done there surely will be trouble.

The present proposition appears to be that everybody is to get as high pay, if not higher, and [illegible] to live cheaper. Any statesmanship that will accomplish that will be of a character which will have a first lien on public office long after doubting protectionists have pre-empted seats of perpetual silence.

Mr. Wilson Has Kept Faith.

There is one thing about the Wilson administration which ought to excite universal admiration. That is the celerity with which it has moved towards keeping its platform pledge to cut down customs house revenue. The Taft administration came into power after promising to do a little revision itself If it had kept its pledge, it might have got a vote of confidence both at the last Presidential primaries and election, instead of a notice to vacate the White House

Brokers' Views

Hunt, Ellis & Company.—The stock market is pursuing its own course apparently, which [illegible] and the natural result under the present [illegible] toward investment and business conditions is that prices continue to seek a lower level The dullness of trading is every now and then enlivened by dribbling liquidation in high-class investment stocks, notably the railroads. In itself this is [illegible] as might be imagined. [illegible] present rates of income return, and it is noticeable that the selling is of only moderate volume. Of course the discouraging feature is the utter lack of buying power and the evident reluctance of investment interests to buy securities. On the other hand, [illegible] factor of a widespread and possibly over-extended short interest. Every little trader is short of stocks, every banker is pessimistic, every business man is crying 'hard times.' On occasions like this it is usually a fact that the [illegible] has been seen and that the turn in the [illegible] there are striking indications of improvement in the security world. There is better buying of bonds and the opinion is growing that before long a [illegible]

[illegible] & Co.—The one thing needed [illegible] stocks are low, on the average, ten points below the level of a year ago. It would take but one [illegible] the present mental attitude of the investing public. Just at the moment it is difficult to see where this is coming from, and until it does come we can expect only such a market as we have been experiencing, but once let sentiment change and [illegible] ripe for a general uplift all along the line.

Wiggin & Elwell.—Hardly a day goes by but [illegible] time before this year and not far from the lowest prices reached in 1907. The market leaders have been showing more resistance to pressure, owing probably, to their somewhat over sold condition. We feel that the action of the market as a whole clearly indicates lower prices.

WILL CUT ANOTHER 'MELON.'

American Tobacco Earned Over 30 Per Cent. on Common Last Year.

Although its common stock has gone to a low record, the American Tobacco Company earned more than 30 per cent. on that issue, it is stated, in 1912, after preferred dividend requirements had been met. Earnings for the first quarter of this year are understood to have been above last year's rate

A New York despatch reads: "Another 'melon' will be cut for American Tobacco common stockholders in near future. This will probably amount to at least 12 per cent. of outstanding stock, and represent proceeds of sale of various treasury securities."

COTTON OUTLOOK HARD TO FORECAST

Price Decline May Mean World's Consumers Are Surfeited By Big Crops.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, April 26.—The cotton situation in America is one which will require more than ordinary judgment to forecast. This applies to market possibilities. There is no reason to doubt but that the enormous weight of 30,000,000 bales which have been marketed during the past twenty months will be felt. It is, however, a problem whether or not the taking of this cotton by the world's consumers has or has not filled up the great deficit brought about by the two previous years of crop failure.

Only One Reason for Drop.

Cotton contracts and actual cotton were strongly supported in the early days of 1909, and throughout that memorable year on the ground that supplies of cotton goods had been exhausted. This same argument was used during the following year, and in consequence prices were held at high levels, a large part of these two crops being sold at between 14 and 15 cents per pound.

With the giant crop of 1911-12 lower prices were secured, but much to the amazement of the cotton world the end of that crop was marketed at between 12 and 13 cents per pound.

And now, at nearly the end of a 14,000,000 bale crop, we have a decline to the 11-cent level for which no reason can be at present stated except that the consumers of cotton have been surfeited with supplies during the past twenty months.

Might it not be possible that consumption has been overestimated as applied to the product of the mills, though, of course, mill takings have been very nearly up to the earlier estimates of probability?

Speculators Have Liquidated.

Speculative operations in contracts during the past week have been nearly all of the liquidating variety. It is very nearly sure that interests in control of the local stock had made sales against their holdings for May delivery, not only in the equivalent of stocks held but to a greater extent. Of course, the public bought because they expected the May future to sell somewhat near the closing quotations of March, which were in the neighborhood of 12.75. May contracts were quoted on Friday as low as 11.31, which shows how easy it is for the public to guess wrong. May contracts sold on Friday at about 6.50 a bale under the price quoted for March when March expired as a trading month.

Crop in Good Shape.

The condition of the crop under cultivation can now be described as much better than for the previous crop as of the same date in 1912. There is a general and accepted conviction that acreage has been increased anywhere from 3 to 12 per cent., but there is a hesitancy on the part of close observers to place the situation in its ultimate possibilities because of the fact that in many sections low temperatures prevail, which will quite likely retard the growth of the young plant. There will be no report from the government on acreage or crop conditions until early in June.

In the cotton goods division of the dry goods trade there is a degree of indifference on the part of buyers, or, perhaps, hesitancy growing out of the tariff question, to say nothing of the fact that the not unusual let up in business at this season of the year is somewhat more in evidence.

DUN ON BANK EXCHANGES.

Dun's Review says that although there is still some loss in the comparison of bank exchanges with a year ago, the exhibit this week is somewhat more favorable than the preceding statement, total clearings at all leading cities in the United States amounting to $2,772,020,544, a falling off of 2.7 per cent. as compared with the corresponding period last year. This contrasts with a decrease last week of one-tenth per cent.

PROPOSED STOCK INCREASE.

Stockholders of the Plymouth Cordage Company will specially meet on May 5 to act on the proposal to increase capital stock by issuing 5,000 shares. It will be offered to stockholders at $150 a share.

CROP OUTLOOK BETTER.

President W. A. Gardner of the Chicago & Northwestern says the only new financing ahead of that road relates to the line it is building into the coal fields in Southern Illinois. He said the outlook for crops in the territory of his road is better now than it was at this time last year.

VALUATION OF THE ROADS.

The board of engineers which will assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in formulating plans for the physical valuation of railroads will be named within a few days and meet in Washington about May 1.

ROAD TO RAISE CHICKENS?

A new idea in railroading is embodied in the request of the Illinois Central upon the University of Illinois for data about the cost and expense of a hen farm. The road, it is understood, is after eggs and chickens for dining cars.

WHEAT MARKET HAS BULLISH TONE

Prices Depend on Foreign Conditions, as Everything Bearish Here Is Discounted.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, April 26.—The wheat situation is likely to continue to advance or decline on the situations in the markets of the old world, as the crop prospects in America have failed to prove a factor favorable to the bears.

Those who are on the bull side of the market have been jockeying for several weeks past in order to inaugurate a bull movement of prominence and at last they have succeeded in interesting the public on the whole, and yet they are buying wheat in goodly amounts.

Cotton Crowd Now In Wheat.

The fact that the New York cotton crowd has come into wheat on a large scale and that they are likely to continue as bulls has cut quite a swath in the matter of sentiment and has helped the price no little. Everything of a bearish character has been brushed aside as so much chaff, as the average speaker cares little for anything that is not favorable to the bull side.

The trade on the whole is bullish and those who put out short lines from day to day are forced to cover and take losses on the advances that are sure to be seen

Enormous quantities of wheat are coming to Chicago from Duluth. Considerable of it has already arrived and more vessels are loading to bring additional amounts to the Chicago market. It is believed that part of this Duluth supply will be diverted to Buffalo as the cash situation in Chicago is not as strong as it is in the East

May Longs Have Liquidated.

The longs in May wheat have been selling that future in the way of liquidation, not caring to stand on their lines and be forced to take in the wheat when May 1st rolls around. It was said on Thursday last that Argentina will be only a small shipper of wheat in the future and the estimate for this week was only 2,400,000 bushels but actual shipments were nearly double that amount and almost equal to the shipments for the corresponding period a year ago.

Texas will commence to cut wheat in five weeks and the plant is now jointed in Oklahoma and Southern Missouri.

There is still an open interest in May corn and the likelihood is that higher prices will be seen not only for that future but for some of the more deferred months. The present rains are likely to prove a benefit to the seeded corn and oats and will doubtless help the bears no little.

PRINT CLOTHS DULL.

Prices Sag and Inquiry Is Moderate in Fall River Market.

FALL RIVER, April 26.—Dullness has characterized the print cloth market all the week, and the tone was unsettled, while prices sagged The inquiry for goods has been very moderate and prices have shaded a little on all styles which have been included in the trading. Some have declined a full ⅛ cent a yard from last week, and all of them at least 1-16 cent. Many buyers have been out of the market Those bidding have wanted spots, if available, and failing them as nearby deliveries as possible. The bidding has been for small lots and the total sales 70,000 pieces, half of them spots. Deliveries on contracts placed are to run from ten weeks to three months. Most sales were of odd lots.

Total curtailment for the week, print cloth grades and fine goods together, figured slightly in excess of 80,000 pieces.

PAYS BETTER THAN WALL ST.

There has been more profit in "speculating" at Monte Carlo than on Wall Street evidently, judging from official reports from the famous Mediterranean resort, where "banks" cash more chips than checks. At the annual meeting of shareholders of the Monte Carlo Casino, it was announced that receipts for last year amounted to $9,400,000. The profits were $3,800,000.

MAY PASS DIVIDEND.

A Salt Lake dispatch says that Daly-West directors have decided to pass the April quarterly dividend and that no time has been set for resumption The surplus has been reduced while exploration is being done in virgin ground. While present production is fair, a lareg part of the ore is second class.

BIG USERS OF CAPITAL BALK AT LEADERS' HIGH DEMANDS AND AWAIT EASIER TERMS

Postponement of Interborough's $78 000,000 Issue an Indication of "Strike" by Borrowers Against Excessive Returns—Trade Is Readjusting Itself on Sane Basis.

By B. C. FORBES.

Are the country's biggest users of capital to go on strike?

Lenders struck for higher wages on their money some two years ago and have been exacting harder terms from borrowers ever since.

B C FORBES

But has the rising tide in the price of capital reached its height? Is an ebb flow now to set in?

There are indications that you will not be able to demand so generous a return on your savings next year. No tree quite reaches heaven. The upward movement has been phenomenal. Conditions are becoming impossible.

The decision of J. P. Morgan & Co. to postpone the $78,000,000 Interborough bond issue is significant. It is a concrete illustration of the disposition of big borrowers to go on strike.

The head of another international banking house of the same class declared privately early in the week:

"I am persuading the railroads with which I am connected not to offer any more bonds at present. I am convinced that the downward movement in investment securities has about ended, and that borrowers will be able to obtain long-term funds on easier terms within the next year or so. For that reason it seems preferable to sell short-date notes for urgent needs now."

On what grounds are borrowers basing their new attitude?

Well, the cost of capital has reached a height that renders it extremely difficult to earn a full return on it. No avoidable enterprises or extensions will be undertaken. Curtailment, not expansion, will be the watchword.

This conservatism, this diminution in the demand for capital, will naturally react upon the supply and upon the price thereof.

Already general trade throughout the United States is decreasing in volume. And the falling off in imports, which was forecast a week ago, is setting in very noticeably. Tariff uncertainties will aggravate this movement during the next few months.

Situation in Europe.

Capital is still extremely timid abroad, but despite the latest unpleasantness caused by Montenegro's defiant occupation of Scutari the end of the war disturbance is in sight.

Europe's half billion of hoarded gold cannot remain useless much longer; it is already beginning to reappear, and its full disgorgement should enable European governments to obtain their needed war and other loans without causing acute, world-wide disturbance.

Therefore, given marked retrenchment in business here, a radical shrinkage in merchandise importations from overseas, the postponement, wherever possible, of important railroad and industrial flotations, and the unrestrained return to banking channels of the millions of dollars now lying dormant abroad—given these looked-for developments, do you not begin to see why our most influential underwriters of securities are counting upon being able to raise capital on less onerous terms by and by?

Those who had feared grave monetary trouble next Autumn are now hopeful that the new turn of events will remove all danger. However, they declare that there is need for discouraging every form of recklessness and extravagance that would tend to expand credit.

The Return to Sanity.

The return to sanity in investments cannot but be accelerated by the collapse of many ventures which were floated to appease the hunger of "investors" for abnormal returns on their savings.

"Burnt bairns dread fire." Thousands of investors clamored for securities that would pay them 7 per cent., or better. They got them—and now they wish they hadn't. The slump in such stocks has been cruel—more than $50 per share in several cases and $78 in Rumely common.

Investors will learn sooner or later that a thoroughly safe bond or a seasoned railroad stock paying 5 to 6 per cent is more to be desired than a purely speculative, untried inflated issue paying 7 per cent or more.

The harm done by such incidents as the bursting of the Rumely bubble and the sensational manipulation of certain oil, industrial and mercantile stocks is incalculable.

Not only do many thousands of relatively poor people lose hard-earned savings, but a frightful crop of animosity toward "Wall Street" in particular and capital in general is sown, the reaping of which bodes no good for American institutions On such things does Socialism feed and wax strong Legislation at Albany.

The bill now before Albany calling for accurate financial statements from corporations is based on a righteous principle, and it should be passed, if not as it stands, at least in a modified form

The New York Stock Exchange, realizing—at last—the need for placing its affairs before the public, has gone the length of extending to college classes in finance and economics invitations to visit the institution and has afforded them unprecedented opportunities for studying the machinery of the exchange. Thus does the Stock Exchange hope to teach the young idea how to shoot straight.

Should stocks be bought now?

That question is put daily. I would not accept the responsibility of giving an unqualified reply in the affirmative at this stage

Next month conditions may warrant a more definite stand

Meanwhile however, well-selected bonds netting about 5 per cent should prove sound investments at current levels.

WHAT RUMELY OFFICERS SAY.

The drop in Rumely preferred and common has elicited a statement from officials of the company which in part reads:

The market of Rumely stock, as reported in the stock exchanges, is a reflection only of stock jobbing in the stock exchange. The Rumely Company sales this year so far are more than 40 per cent greater than last year during the corresponding time The company's property has increased in values and amount, and its obligations are provided for."

WIRELESS BOYS, BEWARE OF LAW!

Uncle Sam'll Get You If You Interfere with Important Messages by Experimenting.

> WIRELESS MESSAGE LAW
> That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not use or operate any apparatus for radio communication as a means of commercial intercourse among the several States, or with foreign nations, or upon any vessel of the United States engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or for the transmission of radiograms or signals the effect of which extends beyond the jurisdiction of the State or Territory in which the same are made, or where interference would be caused thereby with the receipt of messages or signals from beyond the jurisdiction of said State or Territory, except under and in accordance with a license, revocable for cause, in that behalf granted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon application therefor, but nothing in this Act shall be construed to apply to the transmission and exchange of radiograms or signals between points situated in the same State. . . .
> Any person, company or corporation that shall use or operate any apparatus for radio communication in violation of this section, or knowingly aid or abet another person, company or corporation in so doing, shall be DEEMED GUILTY OF A MISDEMEANOR, AND ON CONVICTION THEREOF SHALL BE PUNISHED BY A FINE NOT EXCEEDING FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, AND THE APPARATUS OR DEVICE SO UNLAWFULLY USED AND OPERATED MAY BE ADJUDGED FORFEITED TO THE UNITED STATES.—Federal Act passed August 13, 1912.

This law applies to all amateur wireless operators. It means that the naval radio stations and those licensed to carry on the serious business of commerce have been so annoyed by small devices set up by ambitious experimenters that a law had to be passed by the federal government to regulate and protect the ether waves shot through space.

L. T. Hill, a student at Technology and grandson of Former President Lucius Tuttle of the Boston & Maine Railroad, was the first offender in New England haled before the court for violating the wireless act of 1912.

The fact that young Hill got off with nothing more severe than a sound lecture must not be misjudged by other amateurs. The federal officials in Boston desire that Hill's case serve as a warning to all wireless amateurs hereabouts.

Many Complaints Heard.

Radio Inspector Gawler found that for days there was a decided disturbance which seriously conflicted with licensed messages. Regular stations complained Inspector Gawler made a canvass of all regular and amateur stations in the district but failed to locate the source of trouble, until by a fragment of message picked up it was discovered that young Hill's unlicensed apparatus at his home in Brookline was the offensive device.

Inspector Gawler found Hill in his classroom. He was notified to appear before United States Commissioner Hayes at the federal building. The young man was dumfounded. He explained that he didn't realize that he and his wireless rigging had caused so much havoc. He was directed to appear with his counsel

At the continued hearing Hill was represented by Attorney Melvin O. Adams. Commissioner Hayes laid down the law to the penitent student. He said that, while the United States encouraged in every way the scientific experiments of amateurs, they must be careful to keep their work within the government regulations. Hill eagerly agreed to exercise care in the future. His lawyer also warned him about the requirements of the federal law.

Amateurs Must Beware.

Other wireless amateurs should profit from Hill's narrow escape. If they are caught giving trouble they will have to pay the penalty. The statute quoted above does not affect messages sent within the State, but if your apparatus happens to interrupt an important message to the Navy Yard, for example, it would go hard with you, Mr. Amateur

Section 4 of the Wireless Act reads:

> The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may grant special temporary licenses to stations actually engaged in conducting experiments for the development of the science of radio communication, or the apparatus pertaining thereto, to carry on special tests, using any amount of power or any wave lengths, at SUCH HOURS and UNDER SUCH CONDITIONS as will insure the least interference with the sending or receipt of commercial or government radiograms of distress signals, or with the work of other stations."

A number of regulations as to normal wave lengths, use of "pure wave," "sharp wave," standard distress wave," etc., have been adopted since the act of 1912 went into effect.

5,000 IN TAUNTON PARADE.

Portuguese Have Big Celebration of Feast Day.

TAUNTON, April 26.—One of the biggest celebrations this city has witnessed in several years took place here today when members of the Royal Michaelense Autonomic Association—the largest Portuguese organization in the United States—observed the feast of St. Christie. A big parade in which there were fifteen bands, was one of the features. There were more than 5,000 men in line. It is estimated that upward of 10,000 visitors came into the city

In the morning a solemn high mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Catholic Church. The parade followed, and in the afternoon there was a mass meeting.

R. I. SESSIONS ENDED.

Legislature Authorizes Special Election June 3.

PROVIDENCE, April 26.—After an all-night session the General Assembly of 1913 adjourned sine die today, running only three days over the specified sixty days' term.

One of the last acts of the Assembly was to provide for a special election on June 3 for the submission of a proposition for issuing $2,060,000 bonds for the State institutions. It is expected that at this election the question of whether the State shall guarantee the $6,000,000 bonds of the Southern New England Railway will also be placed on the ballot.

Too Much Boston "Ancestry"

Hart Says Ability Counts

EX-MAYOR HART AND WIFE ON A SUNDAY WALK.

Most recent photograph of the former Mayor and Mrs. Hart, taken by a Sunday AMERICAN photographer as the couple moved along at a step that would be creditable to a couple many years their junior.

Incidentally Boston's Former Mayor, at Eighty-four Is Active in Business.

Who is the youngest old man in Boston? Young in thought, in views of life, in his interest in the events of daily life?

Ex Mayor Samuel A. Green long held the distinction. But since Dr. Green's accident and his withdrawal to a country life in Groton ex Mayor Thomas N. Hart has been unanimously given the honor

Eighty-four years of age, Mr. Hart is almost as active as when a quarter of a century ago he began his term of office as Mayor, a position he was elected to for three terms.

An AMERICAN photographer "snapped" the ex Mayor and Mrs. Hart as they were out for a Sunday walk. He thought they typified the newest and best in all the sights he had chanced across that day.

Finds Perennial Youth.

And the more one considers the personality of Boston's famous ex-Mayor the more striking become those characteristics which keep him perennially young Mr. Hart in his conversation easily shows one of the keenest intellects to be found in Boston

He is one of the most regular of business men of the city. Every day when the weather is fine he walks from his home at No. 298 Commonwealth avenue to his office at No. 85 Bedford street. Entering his office after this brisk walk through the business district Mr. Hart appears as fresh and vital as a healthy man of middle life.

He has decided views concerning the development of the city he presided over Also of the nation. He believes this is the day of young men. The day of the old man he believes has passed.

The successful man in Mr. Hart's opinion is the man who has the ability to gather into his organization active, young men. Says Mr. Hart:

Too Much "Ancestry."

The trouble with Boston and some of her young men is they think too much of their ancestry as an aid to winning their way in the world. Our Puritan ancestors were all right in their time and generation. But they would never do in these days. They have gone to their last reward. Let them rest.

Let us get right down to the affairs of the present. Be progressive in business. Look for the main chance. Remember the young man who, looking for a position in Chicago years ago, began his recommendation with "My great-grandfather was so-and-so," mentioning a name well known in New England commercial life.

"I don't care who your grandfather was," said his prospective employer. "What I want to know is who and what are you."

I believe that the young man has a better chance today in business than he ever had. He has a wider opportunity than he had when I began business in Boston. Conditions naturally are different. But the young man has opened for him unrivalled opportunities for advancement

If he is employed by a large concern and has it in him he has a chance to make good. Capital is always seeking talent. The young man who has the ability is almost certain to obtain recognition from the big business interests.

Greater Opportunities Now.

He may not be able to secure an interest in the business as easily as he could in my early days in business. But he may command an income twice or three times as large as a young man could when I began my business life. If he has the right stuff in him the chances of success for a young man today are better than ever they were Ex-Mayor Hart was born in North Reading, January 20, 1829. When he was fifteen he came to Boston and worked in a dry goods store on Kilby street. Later he went into a hat store on Hanover street. Attaining his majority he became a partner of Philip A. Locke in Dock square, establishing a wholesale and retail fur and hat store.

Eleven years later he formed the hat and fur company of Hart, Taylor & Co., from which he retired in 1879 to become president of the Mount Vernon Bank.

In Politics at 50.

Having secured a comfortable business, Mr. Hart entered public life at fifty years of age, becoming a member of the Common Council in 1879, 1880 and 1881. The next three years he spent in the Board of Aldermen In 1889, Mr. Hart became Mayor of Boston. At the close of his term in 1890, he was appointed Postmaster of Boston by President Harrison. He held over into the Cleveland administration, when he resigned.

Mrs. Hart is as young as her companion of many years of happy married life. She was formerly Miss Elizabeth Snow of Bowdoin, Me., and is considerably her husband's junior.

POSTMASTER RESIGNS.

Lowell Official Gives "Pressure of Business" as Reason.

LOWELL, April 26.—Postmaster Joseph A. Legare resigned today. His resignation is to take effect as soon as his successor is appointed. "Pressure of business" is the reason given by Legare. The real cause is said to be the recent order of the Postmaster General demanding that all postmasters devote their entire time to their postoffice duties.

Mr. Legare is actively connected with the American Stop Motion Company and the Heinz Power Company. His salary as postmaster was $4,000 and his outside jobs brought between $5,000 and $6,000 more. Mr. Legare was formerly secretary to Congressman Butler Ames.

Candidates for the postmastership are former Mayor James B. Casey, Major Robert J. Crowley, formerly of the Governor's staff, and Fisher H. Pearson, a brother of Adjutant-General Pearson.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Miss Alys Appleton Meyer, the second daughter of former Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. George Von L. Meyer, of Boston and Washington, became the bride in St. John's Episcopal Church at noon today of Lieutenant Raymond Cristopher Rogers, U. S. N., son of Colonel and Mrs. Alexander Rogers.

Leaders of society in two administrations witnessed the ceremony. The Rev. Roland Cotton Smith officiated.

It was while the bride was a house guest of Miss Helen Taft at the White House, where the groom was stationed as an aide to the President that their romance began.

Miss Taft was one of the bridesmaids today. The others were Miss Ruth Appleton of New York, a cousin of the bride, Miss Christine Hunnewell of Boston, Miss Martha Cook of New York, and the Misses Katherine Jennings and Dorothy Williams of Washington.

Donald Rogers, brother of the groom, acted as best man, and another brother, Alexander Rogers, was an usher. Other ushers were Clarence Hay, Sloane Donenhower, Lieutenant David W. Bagley, U. S. N., and Major James A. Logan, U. S. A.

Got Start to Wealth By Observation

Gloucester Man Who Is Buried Today Built Immense Fortune from Fish Glue.

Here's a story on the value of OBSERVATION, illustrated by the life of Benjamin Robinson of Gloucester, who became rich and famous by his discovery of fish glue and whose funeral takes place in that city today.

Mr. Robinson at eighty-four had undergone an operation he could not survive because of his advanced age.

This is Mr. Robinson's own story of how, by being observant, fame and fortune came to his doors:

> Sitting at dinner one day eating fish chowder my spoon happened to turn over on the back of my fingers. When I took my napkin to dry my hand I found my fingers stuck together
> I held up my hand to my wife and said "Look at that, I believe glue can be made from fish"
> I put a cod's head into a pan and steamed it for two hours. I took a gallon of the strained liquid to A. M. Clark on Congress street. He offered me $1.25 a gallon, and I told him, "If that suits you, it does me." That's the way I started my [illegible] business.

EMMETS TO CELEBRATE.

STUDENTS FLEE FIRE IN AMHERST

Help Summoned from Adjoining Town for Blaze That Caused $75,000 Loss.

AMHERST, April 26.—Fifty persons, including several women and a dozen Amherst College students, fled to the street in a panic, early today when the Hunt Block in South Pleasant street was destroyed by fire with a loss of $75,000.

The occupants abandoned the building in their nightclothes and saved practically nothing. Many had narrow escapes and several were saved from being trapped by the flames by the heroism of Chief of Police Graves and Patrolman Thomas Dillon, who discovered the fire

Help was summoned from Northampton but by the time the tired horses covered the eight miles over the road the four story brick block was in ruins. The firemen were greatly handicapped in fighting the fire owing to the lack of pressure. The streams hardly reached the top story of the block and the firemen were forced to throw [illegible] through the windows to [illegible] way for the water

NEWPORT, R. I., April 26.—Mrs. Stanley McCormick of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, has rented Stoneacre villa on Bellevue avenue, owned by Mrs. Linda Lee Thomas.

WHY

YOU GET THE TRUTH IN FINANCE ONLY IN THE BOSTON NEWS BUREAU

The foundation of advertising and prosperity in the popular press is circulation.

The last ten thousand circulation must come from the lowest prejudice against capital.

Therefore papers of wide general circulation must not appear in defence of corporations or capital.

There is no news of general interest in the defence of investments owned by unpopular minorities.

NEWS, that swells newspaper circulation, is of assault, attack, charges, crime, vice, accident, losses and destruction. NEWS is not of virtue, safety, integrity, honesty, loyalty, faithfulness, or honor.

The Boston News Bureau is read by the man at the top; the bank president, the bank director, the corporation president, the heads of construction and upbuilding, the men of finance, the men of investments, the architects of fortune and the builders in finance and material progress.

They know the news of finance, of fact, of statistics, of progress, and need no black or red headline guide.

For twenty-five years the Boston News Bureau has been building in this field.

It has more experts at work in the financial field than all its newspaper contemporaries in New England combined.

The Boston News Bureau serves the first 10,000—not the last.

This is why the Boston News Bureau can tell you the truth about New England transportation interests and is not fooled by the misleading statements put forth by collusion between investigators the people pay and investigators the people do not pay.

Did you ever read, outside the Boston News Bureau, the exposure of the charge that Mr. Billard made $2,700,000 by buying Boston & Maine from the New Haven and selling it back?

Did you read the figures, published only in the Boston News Bureau, that Mr. Billard stood to lose $2,000,000 in the purchase of Boston & Maine and never could have made even $200,000 out of this $14,000,000 purchase?

Does any paper except the Boston News Bureau expose the ridiculous charge that the New Haven road loses $572,941 annually under that Pullman contract—a charge made possible only by omitting the $7,800,000 received in cash and new equipment by the New Haven road from the Pullman Company?

Does any other paper than the Boston News Bureau tell you that Charles S. Mellen never made a cent out of the New Haven road beyond his salary voted by the directors, of which he takes only 90 per cent.?

Does any other paper than the Boston News Bureau show the wickedness of the defamers and detractors of New England, who give basis for the sensational headlines in the newspapers and the charge of looting New England's transportation system, by falsely valuing at par 3 per cent. securities given for B. & M. shares while the Massachusetts Validation Commission set their value at 67?

You get the truth in finance in relation to New England investments only by reading the Boston News Bureau.

$1.00 per month, $12.00 per annum, 5 cents the copy; and it could not be produced for twice this price as a manufacturing cost, except in conjunction with its bulletin news service to the banking interests.

Bankers do not pay $50 a month, or $600 a year, for anything but the truth in respect to finance. The public may have it, a few hours later, for $1.00 per month, or $12.00 per annum.

The facts of finance for a New England investor are to be had only in the Boston News Bureau.

Subscribe for it now. You get the financial truth nowhere else.

STANDARD — SINGER — WHITE — NATIONAL — DOMESTIC — DAVIS — NEW HOME — KING — AMERICAN — MANHATTAN — and other celebrated factories made the Sewing Machines that are involved in this great sale. All are the Machines for which you expect to pay agents, and average dealers, "full" prices. To do that NOW would be an inexcusable extravagance. Observe the prices printed in the opposite sub-division, and decide what you want, the price you wish to pay, and then purchase at once. It's the chance of the year.

We've been six months planning this sale. It will begin Monday morning at 8:30. One thousand Sewing Machines are available. Cash or easy terms. Fine Machines put into the homes of the people—thousands of dollars saved by them.

Seven wonderfully advantageous transactions gave us possession of one thousand Machines at enormously reduced prices, and all our efforts are concentrated on effecting a quick distribution. Our aim is to close out the entire lot in one week—and we believe the high character of the Machines, combined with the ridiculously low prices quoted for them, will accomplish it.

One thousand Sewing Machines—every one having the best mechanism that great factories can produce. We calculate that the public will save—at the lowest estimate—$10,000—by the opportunities this sale affords. Compared with prices asked by ordinary dealers, agents and canvassers—the aggregate saving is $20,000.

1.00 A WEEK—There are one thousand Machines—all will be sold. Unlimited choice to first-comers. Nothing reserved—no restrictions, except that we positively will not knowingly sell to any agent or dealer. Purchasers cannot fail to secure extraordinary value. You'll say so, too.

For obvious reasons we cannot fill telephone and mail orders for any of these machines. Come in person and see them. Come as early as you can. That's the only way for you to realize the advantages offered during this sale.

RACQUETS

When a Tennis Racquet makes the name of its manufacturer famous the manufacturer rightly grows hypersensitive and hypercritical concerning his product. Unless the Racquet is perfect it may hurt the reputation of the name it bears.

We have 60 Racquets that have trifling blemishes. The quality is there, the nice balance is there, the wear worth is there. But a scratch, or an abrasion, or a dent is also there—and the manufacturer erased his great name from them on that account.

They are worth up to $8.00; choice at........ $2.79

$2.79 commands everything but that strange spell—a name.

By L. R. MURDOCH.

There is this that can be truthfully said of George Stallings' Pilgrims. They are great little record breakers. They smashed another yesterday. It was not their own record. It belonged to the Phillies. These Phillies came here with the title of "runless wonders." They had made twelve runs in nine games, four of which they had won, three lost and two tied. This is the record that was shattered. They are "runless" wonders no more. For they scored ten tallies in one afternoon at South End Park.

In that one session with the Pilgrims they made within two of as many runs as they had made all the way down the eastern circuit before they arrived here. They will be here three days more. In that period they ought to be fairly well established as a regular ball club, with enough runs to qualify.

In this way do the Boston Nationals break into the baseball limelight. Throughout the country today it will be related how they broke up the Quakers "runless record."

How They Get Away with It.

While this performance was going on yesterday afternoon we learned how William Locke's inoffensive ball tossers get away with "runless baseball." They are supported by some giltedged flingers of the horsehide. One of them, "Mysterious Tom" Seaton, who had blazed a triumphant trail through Philadelphia, New York and Brooklyn before he arrived here, was introduced to 6,000 or more Boston "fans" yesterday.

Seaton is called "Mysterious Tom," because it's a mystery how he wins ball games. He did not seem to "have anything" yesterday. The Pilgrim batters said he hadn't. Yet, for some mysterious reason, they kept poking his long, fast slants into the infielders' hands, and their side of the score card was one extended procession of goose-eggs, except in the seventh inning, when a couple of incidents permitted them to flash for a moment as run-getters.

Seaton Lost the Plate.

For a few minutes in this period "Mysterious Tom" lost the location of the plate. He hunted all around the place where it ought to have been, but failed to discover it until he had passed three men, which circumstance, abetted by an unexpected base hit from Kirke's bat, forced Cy Seymour across the place where the plate ought to be, for one precious run. That was one incident.

The other occurred a bit later when, with two men out, Maranville hoisted a high fly ball—Seaton having found the plate in the meantime and having struck out "Buster" Brown—into right centre. This fly ball should have been easy practice for Rightfielder Dolan, but it was the only one that went to the Phillies' outfield all the afternoon and Dolan was naturaly taken off his guard. It was so totally unexpected.

When Dolan did convince himself that the ball was really coming to the outfield, he chased after it. But it wedged itself in between him and the sun, he lost sight of it and the ball dropped at his feet. This bit of good fortune gave Maranville credit for a two-bagger, with which he cleared the bases.

Except when Tyler doubled in the first inning and went to third on an out; when Kirke singled in the ninth and took second the same way, and when the events noted above came to pass in the seventh, no Pilgrim passed first base.

"Hub" Perdue started to pitch for Boston. He lasted three innings, during which he smote the Phillies' runless record hip and thigh. They scored in

Stallings Changes Players' Bench in Search for Luck

GEORGE STALLINGS confesses he is superstitious. Yesterday he moved the Pilgrims from the playing bench near third base to the dug-out near first base, formerly occupied by the visiting team. The Phillies were assigned to the third base bench.

"What was the change made for?" the Pilgrims' manager was asked.

"Oh, maybe it will bring a bit of luck. You can't tell," he laughed.

But there were "bugs" in the crowd that saw yesterday's game who were mean enough to hint that the change was made so that the players would not have so far to walk —intimating that the Pilgrims do so much of their performing along the line between home plate and first base and so little between third base and home plate that it is actual physical and shoe-leather economy to place them on the right side of the diamond.

Those "bugs" were mean-dispositioned fellows.

Ty Cobb to Get $12,000 Salary From 'Tygers'

DETROIT, Mich., April 26.—W. B. Jarvis, head of the big sporting goods house of which Ty Cobb is vice-president, stated today, after a visit with his ball player partner that President Navin had enjoined Cobb not to tell anybody the size of his new salary.

"Ty is observing his promise strictly," said Mr. Jarvis. He wouldn't tell me, and I guess if he told any one he would tell me."

Mr. Jarvis believes, however from what he knows about the old contract and the circumstances of the signing of the new one, that $12,000 is the correct figure. Cobb asked Jarvis to make a guess, and that was the figure ventured. Ty looked his partner straight in the eye and would not deny, saying only, "Well, it isn't $15,000."

Cobb was nervous and fidgety today. He is wondering just what sort of a reception the fans will give him when he appears in uniform. He knows there has been considerable knocking and is not certain that the attitude of all the fans will be friendly.

President Navin was notified today by Ban Johnson that Cobb was eligible to play, and he will be in the lineup tomorrow. Jennings has not definitely decided whether to bench High or Gainor. If Gainor is given a rest, Cobb will go to right and Crawford to first.

Yale Wipes Out U. of P. Early Win

YALE FIELD, New Haven, Ct., April 26.—Yale today took revenge upon University of Pennsylvania, the only rival college to defeat the Blue this year. By defeating the Quakers, 3 to 5, this afternoon, the Elis feel that they have wiped out the memory of the 5 to 4 eleven-inning defeat administered during the Easter vacation.

Today's game was a wretched exhibition, Yale pounding Captain Imlay for four hits and working him for four passes in the fifth inning, netting eight runs and turning the game into a farce.

Phillies Protest 2 Giant Victories

President William Locke, the new head of the Phillies, last night sent to President Tom Lynch of the National League a protest against the games played between Philadelphia and New York at the Polo Grounds last Wednesday and Thursday. In those games the Giants won, 3 to 1 and 7 to 1 respectively.

The basis of the protest was a large hole which, the Phillies claim, had been dug in the infield behind the pitcher's slab. The object of this excavation was a mystery to the Phillies, they say. It was filled in before Friday's game, which was a 12-inning scoreless tie, made so by virtue of Umpire Klem's failure to see the pinch base hit made by "Moose" McCormick, which scored a run that should have won the game for the Giants. This hit, by the way, was made while Klem was announcing McCormick as a pinch hitter, according to league rules, so the umpire could not be blamed for the incident.

The rules of baseball call for a level playing field, and the Phillies think they can have the two lost games thrown out because the field was not level.

Defeat Pick of Eastern High School Relay Teams by Great Sprint in One Mile Race Championship at Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, April 26.—Records were smashed on all sides at the annual relay carnival of the University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field this afternoon. Penn chalked up two new marks, in the four-mile and the freshmen relays, Michigan set up a new mark in the two-mile relay, Phillips Exeter Academy established a new world's scholastic record and Talbot of Cornell set up a new American record in the discus throw.

With all these new records, perfect weather, a wonderfully fast track and a big crowd these games will go down in history as the greatest ever.

Promptly at 1 o'clock the first of 200 teams, the largest number ever entered for relays, were called to the post. The schoolboy races were the first to be run, and it can be said that they furnished as exciting and close races as did the crack college teams.

Boston English High School won the high school championship for the one-mile relay, with a team composed of Morgan, Cahill, Williams and Captain Irving Howe, running anchor. Their time was 3 32 1-5.

Brooklyn Manual was second and Philadelphia Central High was third.

The Boston runners had an easy victory. They started out in the lead and were never headed. The Boston boys ran an easy race and with more competition, it is believed that the record for the event, incidentally held by Boston English made in 1911, would have suffered. The Boston boys were not pushed hard, however. A change was made in the English High team makeup earlier in the day. Edward Barry was scheduled to start in the race, but at the last minute Horace Cahill was put in the quartet and he ran a great race.

A big surprise was sprung when Phillips Exeter Academy of Exeter, N. H., won the preparatory school relay championship and also made a new world's scholastic record. The Exeter runners were pitted against the crack Mercerberg Academy team and were pushed into the new record. The time was 3 26 1-5, which was a fifth of a second better than the time made by Mercerberg last year.

Mercerberg Academy ran second in the event, and though they failed to win, Robinson, their fourth man, ran the fastest quarter-mile done in America this year. His time was 48 3-5s.

The Boston High School of Commerce and Chelsea (Mass.) High were represented in the high school championships but failed to place.

Penn made a runaway race of the four mile relay, the banner event of the afternoon. Their time of 18 1-5 beats the old Penn record by seven seconds.

NEW YORK, April 26.—More than 12,000 "bugs," rooters, "fans," girls and Lew Fields saw the Yankees lose to the World's champions today at the Polo Grounds by the score of 8 to 5. Scrambled eggs was the best you could call the meal. If Congressman Gallagher had seen this performance he would have some real dope in investigating syndicate baseball.

Suffering souls. Any time the United States government gets fresh in baseball it will be good news. If Uncle Sam had stepped in a little earlier we would now have Jim McGuire behind the bat and Jack Chesbro in the box for New York.

Gallagher says that ball players are slaves. Well, if that is so what they need is a Simon Legree. Frank Chance Legreed his squad today, working four pitchers—McConnell, Fisher, Warhop and Schultze. Outside of Lew Fields one of the foremost spectators was "Armless" Sutton, the billiard player. He went to the club house after the game and volunteered his services. Chance looked him over closely, and it may be that in Monday's game we will see this boy in action.

Sox Out-Hit the Yankees.

Boston out hit the Yankees, 12 to 6, and had one less error. Jake Stahl has a bum leg, so Clyde Engle played first, and as for New York Chance sent in a new infield with Miller Stump at short and Hartzell at second. Chance is trying out all the material he has and when he gets through looking them over there will be some new faces in the minor leagues.

Jake Stahl used "Dutch" Leonard, a southpaw from California. He went to school at St. Mary's, situated in Fresno, same spot where Duffy Lewis and Harry Hooper gained their education. He won the championship for Denver last season and he showed a swell curve today.

Boston played no such tight ball against the Yankees as did Connie Mack's bunch, and Stahl will have to glue up his mob if he is going to repeat on the flag.

The Yanks made a desperate effort to bottle things up in the ninth, Stump singling and Sweeney reaching first on a fielder's choice. McKechnie batted for Shultz, but neither he nor Wolter could deliver and the struggle had lasted two hours and twenty minutes. It was about time

Engle got a scratch hit and the session finally closed with a smart double play when Wagner flied to Cree and Gardner was nailed off second.

How Game Was Played.

The game started off in dismal style for New York when Hooper picked a spitter just inside of first base to the bulwarks, getting two cushions handily. Neal Ball, who was famous once for pulling a triple play unassisted, struck out, but Hooper stole third during the process.

At this point Chase was put to a severe test on a furious line drive over his head from the bat of Tris Speaker. It was good for three bases, and the best you can say is that some famous centre gardeners might have nailed the slam, but they would have been lucky to do so.

Duffy Lewis pinch hit past short, a bitter single, sending Speaker home, thus putting over two runs in the first. Gardner died to Chance unassisted.

The total damage during this brief appearance of George McConnell was a triple, a double and single, each bingle clean as a hound's tooth.

The Huskites got one run over in their first time up when Leonard walked Chase and Hartzell. It developed that the Boston Southpaw was handicapped by having the wrong glove. He changed gloves, unfortunately for him, too late. Cree drove a clean blue chip to centre allowing Chase to gallop home.

Leonard's Hit Was Timely.

That was all because Chance, who received vast applause, showing that a lot of folks are with him in his tough task.

WOULDN'T IT GET YOUR GOAT?

A few lines upon the Sox at Washington Friday, from an "Elegy in a Boston Graveyard"

The Sox have licked Old Fox clean out of sight,
The sad fans homeward plod their weary way.
AND THEN—FOR

flied to right and Hartzell was doubled at third

Boston flickered out one, two, three in the second inning, a feature being Miller Stump's handling of a swift hopper from Wagner's willow and nipping the runner at first.

The World's Champions had an opening in the third when Neal Ball walked and Tris Speaker scratched his second hit. Believe me, it was a scratch, for McConnell failed to cover first when Chance fielded the ball

Big George held Lewis to a weak bouncer so the chucker was useless.

Awful sad, the fourth Boston inning. With Gardner out on a force by Engle and with Wagner out on a fly, Carrigan got on first when Miller Stump fumbled an easy grounder off the big backstop.

And shouts of Buck Ewing, these two heavyweights then pulled a double steal on Williams.

Bedient Sent in to Pitch.

And it was a costly steal, too, for Pitcher Leonard, who is a rattling good hitter, slapped a single past McConnell, scoring Engle with the third run for Boston.

Nothing absolutely cataclysmic happened until the seventh, when New York jammed in a tally. For a while it looked as though the Dutchman, Leonard, was aurgesplelt. He passed Cree and Chase and Midkiff, nicely avoiding a fast one that would have pierced his midriff, then dumped a shifty sacrifice, advancing both sprinters.

The news arrived upon Miller Stump's bump out, via Gardner and Engle, Cree denting the dish.

Daniels batted for Williams, and the man who has the hardest head in baseball, according to Walter Johnson, essayed for a walk, making three white-clothed athletes on the sawdust. Dutch Leonard now having passed three in one inning, decided to retire.

At least, Jake Stahl, who is out of the game because of a game leg, yanked his fellow-Californian and sent in Bedient. With this switch Chance sent Jack Lelivelt to the plate in place of McConnell

ATHLETICS BEAT OUT WASHINGTON

Batting Rally in the Eighth Inning Brings Victory to the Mackmen.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 26.—The Athletics defeated Washington this afternoon in a hotly contested battle by the score of three to two. It was anybody's game until the eighth inning, when the White Elephants uncorked a batting rally.

A triple by Collins and a double by McInnis, combined with a fielder's choice, to give the home team two runs and victory

For seven innings it was a standoff, so effective was the respective hurling of Brown and Hughes, the rival moundsmen. Houck relieved Brown in the eighth and allowed one run, but the Athletics came back with two and won.

CARDINALS BEAT OUT REDS IN TENTH, 6-5.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 26.—Five successive hits in the tenth inning netted a 6 to 5 victory for the Cardinals over the Reds today. When the home team went to bat they were two runs behind. Huggins singled to left and Magee repeated to right. Then Julian Johnson succeeded Fromme, Mowrey's single to left scored Huggins while Koney's safe bunt filled the bases. Harmon was wild, and after filling the bases in the sixth with two walks and a hit batter, was removed in favor of Perritt. Rube Benton did the same in the first when he was removed. Manager Huggins reached first five successive times on two hits, one walk, and being hit twice, also scoring three runs. The score:

GIANTS DEFEATED BY THE DODGERS

25,000 "Fans" Witness Downfall of National League Champions, 5 to 3.

BROOKLYN, April 26.—In the presence of a crowd that taxed Ebbetts Field to its capacity Brooklyn defeated the New York Giants today, 5 to 3. McCormick was sent in to bat for Wiltse in the seventh and, with a triple, drove in two runs and tied the score. Stengel, however, landed on the ball in the Dodgers' half of the same inning, driving it to the fence.

Ragon had previously occupied first by virtue of a single and he trotted home ahead of Stengel on the home run which won the game.

Perdue Is Knocked From Box

mathematical progression, one in the first, two in the second and three in the third. If permitted to continue logically all afternoon, this would have meant forty-five runs. Since one record was enough for one day, George Stallings inconsiderately plucked "Hub" from the firing line, and will give him the opportunity to begin where he left off—some other day.

In this affair Perdue permitted the visitors two hits to an inning, but two of them were doubles and Sherwood Magee finished the climax by driving a home run into the bleachers in the third, scoring Knabe and Lobert ahead of him. Bill Sweeney contributed to the general gayety just before this by fumbling a hard one from Lobert's bat, which gave Lobert first base and Knabe second. He completed the festivities by pegging wide to first, giving each runner an extra base, so they did not have so far to run when Magee came across with his four sacker.

"Buster" Brown succeeded Perdue. He was not much more successful, although he stretched the agony over twice as much time. In only one session—the fifth did the Phillies break through seriously. Four singles, a sacrifice and a base on balls furnished the material for four more runs in this inning.

But the Crowd Was Happy.

The 6,000 looked upon what has been heretofore described with composure and the utmost good nature. They were obviously there to have a good time, regardless. Several incidents contributed to their pleasure. The following are mentioned because they provoked more laughter than the others:

With two down in the first inning, Hans Lobert rolled a cute little bunt down the third base line. The ball twisted onto the chalk mark, drifted outside, then veered back again. Arthur Devlin and Bill Rariden chased it along, waiting for it to take a freak and roll outside.

They were disappointed. The ball was not a nice, tractable little ball. It took a sudden "English" just before it reached third base and curved more than a foot into the diamond. Then—just as suddenly and as it seemed about to stop—it spun around and around and trickled across the line. The instant it was over Devlin clapped his mit on it. There was an uproar from the Phillies when this happened, and Umpire Rigler hurried up to see for himself. While he was pegging towards third Lobert trotted to second

The Umpire Was Mixed, Too.

Rigler unexpectedly declared that the ball was fair—the reason wherefore not being made public. At the same time he motioned Lobert back to first base—another act for which we can conceive no good reason. The Phillies set up another protest. Whereupon Rigler changed his mind and told Lobert to stay where he was. This aroused Captain Bill Sweeney and he went to the plate and complained. Rigler shooed him back, recalling his recent suspension; Sweeney quit the argument. We had to score it a two-base hit. But it was a travesty on scoring rules to do it. Magee doubled on the next play, scoring Lobert.

Luderus came through with the first squeeze play of the season at South End Park. He scored from third, when Killifer hit to Maranville and was out at first.

Dolan hoisted a high fly in front of the plate in the fifth. Calhoun, Maranville and Devlin ran for it. They rushed into a group and all three extended their arms. It looked like a bunch of eager newsboys trying to beat each other out on a rush sale. Calhoun, having the longest arms, got the ball.

Dooin Was Banished.

Charlie Dooin, boss of the Quakers, was banished from the field, after an odd adventure in the eighth. Killifer was on first when Seaton hit to Sweeney. Bill shot the ball to Maranville at second for an easy force-out. Killifer turned his back just as Maranville threw to double Seaton at first. The ball hit him squarely in the back and bounded into centrefield. Sweeney said that Killifer had raised his arms, intentionally interfering with the throw, and Umpire Byron agreed with him

Dooin protested vehemently and Byron ordered him to leave the field

PROVIDENCE TAKES FALL OUT OF LEAFS

Grays Beat the Toronto Bunch By the Score of 4 to 1.

PROVIDENCE, April 26.—Providence defeated Toronto today in the most snappy game of the season. The Leafs outbatted the Grays two to one, but fast fielding and steady pitching by Reisigl in the pinches prevented them from scoring until the ninth, when Shaw drove one in deep centre for the circuit

Maxwell worked a slow ball and fast one with much success but when the hits were needed the Grays came to time with the necessary bingle

Kelly and "Peaches" Graham were sent to the clubhouse for kicking at the umpires. Shean's steal home and an assist by Platte to the plate were the features.

HARVARD AND TECHNOLOGY OARSMEN BUSY ON THE CHARLES

WARM WEATHER AND FINE ROWING CONDITIONS PUT ATHLETES IN PRIME FORM FOR SEASON

The perfect weather and rowing conditions during the past week proved to be the proper Spring tonic for the oarsmen of Harvard and Technology, and great improvements were made in the week. Every day the crews were enabled to get out, and as a result the athletes are in the very best condition, although the Crimson boat is still unsettled.

Captain C. T. Abeles of the Harvard crew has written the Yale Daily News as follows regarding rowing conditions at Cambridge: Although the rowing season is nearly half over, the progress of the university crew has not been quite so satisfactory as we had hoped for.

"This is due to several causes; the weather has been the worst we have experienced for many seasons.

"Another cause has been the unsettled condition of the boat itself, for, although material is abundant, the process of trial and elimination has resulted in many changes, and no eight men have been rowing together for any length of time.

"The varsity boat is made up of strong but comparatively inexperienced oarsmen. Three of the men, Meyer, Harwood and Pirnie, are from last year's freshman eight, and two others, Chanler and Morgan, have never rowed the four miles against Yale

"The shell presented last year by Mr. Hoyt and designed by Mr. Crane along the lines of a racing motor boat is now being tried out."

SPRINGFIELD, April 26 After Bridgeport had taken the lead in the eighth Springfield rallied in the ninth and defeated Bridgeport this afternoon 3 to 2. Weigold opened the ninth with a hit to deep short. Reilly sacrificed and Weigold tied the score when Pratt shot a scorcher through Stow's legs.

Justin walked, but was caught off second. Keegan hit to short and the ball bounded over Stow's shoulder, Pratt scoring the winning run. A bare hand jumping catch of a Texas leaguer by Stow was the fielding feature. The score:

EXETER, N. H., April 26.—Phillips Exeter Academy this afternoon suffered its first defeat in two years on its home field when the Yale Freshmen nine won a 3 to 2 victory after a hard ten-inning fight. The weakness of the Exeter pitcher in the early innings of the game gave the Eli boys the chance.

Briggs, pitching for Exeter in the first seven innings and allowed five hits and four costly free passes. A mixture of free passes and hits in the seventh inning gave Yale two runs. BASEBALL IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES OF GREATER BOSTON

HARVARD BEATEN BY COLBY, 5 TO 2

James Allows Crimson Batters a Pair of Hits and Is Only in Danger Once.

Colby defeated Harvard, 5 to 2, yesterday afternoon on Soldiers' Field. While the home team made many costly errors and wild throws, the Colby aggregation played clean, fast ball, giving almost errorless support to Pitcher James, who went through nine innings allowing the Cambridge nine but two measly singles.

Clean ba[illegible] in the first [illegible] two [illegible] Reed came up and singled for [illegible] Cummings sacrificed, and James planked down a second one. Thereupon, a Maine pirate, named Lafleur, laced one for a double, scoring Reed. Campbell duplicated the process, but Lafleur was held on third. The two scored on Lowney's single.

Crimson Is Helpless

James held Harvard scoreless in the second, third and fourth. In the fifth Frye, who was mound-artist for the Cantabs, began to loosen up a bit, but was saved by some pretty outfield defensive work. Again the Crimson batters went out in order, and the Waterloo began.

A wild throw left Lowney safe at first. He advanced on a sacrifice. An error at shortstop, after a second sacrifice, left Nutting on first, with Lowney safely reposing at third. When on Reed's single, still another bad fielder's choice let in Lowney and Reed, Captain Wingate decided it was time to make a change, so he called for Hitchcock.

The husky football lad took hold, succeeded in stopping the score at once, and thereafter proceeded to play the whole Harvard game. He struck out two men, assisted another to the bench, and, though he could not negotiate a hit himself, he sacrificed once.

James Loses Nerve.

The lucky seventh came around, but all the luck it brought in was the pleasure of seeing James down the Harvard end with two strikeouts and a meagre roller. Hitchcock, in his half, did some work himself, retiring three aspiring Colbyites with three pitched balls.

Two fast and beautiful plays by Wingate and a long fly in the ninth put the Harvard side on the batting end. For once James lost his nerve and passed Wingate. Hitchcock planned to sacrifice, but succeeded in making first on a fielder's choice which left Wingate in tranquil possession of third. Clark then slammed out the second and last Harvard hit of the afternoon, scoring Wingate. Ayers sacrificed and Hitchcock came across the plate. Then Gannett fanned and Hardwick flied out to deep center. The summary:

RECORDS SMASHED PENN RELAY MEET

How English High Boys Carried Off the School Championship.

champion and record holder, performed under their marks. Wright, of Dartmouth, fell down badly in the pole vault, although he holds the record for this event.

Two records were equalled, one of them a world's, in the early events. The world's mark was in the first heat of the high hurdles, which Nicholson, of the University of Missouri, did in 15 1-5. As only three timers caught him, however, the record will not stand as official.

The other record was hung up by DeWitt of Clinton High School, New York, which won its relay in 3 35, equalling the high school record held by Erasmus Hall of Brooklyn. The record was made possible by the fast quarter made by "Billy" Moore, who picked up a bad second and romped away with the lead.

Track in Perfect Shape.

Seldom in all the years of relays at Penn has the track been in such perfect shape or the weather so propitious for record-breaking. The warm days recently dried out the cinders and left the surface hard and springy, and smooth as an ironing board. The sun took all the kinks out of the newly trained muscles and there was little wind to make the heart-breaking stretches around the oval.

Between the arriving spectators and the small army of contestants crowded around the starting pole there was little attention paid to the first races, those of the schoolboys, for whom the usual quarter mile is cut in half. Their followers, mostly in the east stand, supplied what cheering there was, but they hardly made themselves heard above the starter.

With the high school events, however, things began to "noisen" up.

New School Record.

Billy Moore, running the last lap for DeWitt Clinton of New York, nosed out his rival from Erasmus Hall, Brooklyn, equalling the record for high schools, 3 35, held by the Brooklyn institution. Northeast finished third, ahead of their New Manuel rivals from West Philadelphia.

A protest was made against Manhattan prep. in event No. 21, on the grounds that they played on a college basketball team.

George School, however, ran them off their feet and cleaned up an easy victory. Manhattan managed to nose out Brooklyn Poly.

Penn Charter of Philadelphia won the inter-academic in easy fashion and slow time.

The college freshmen relay championship brought only two teams to the mark, Penn and Columbia. It proved to be a runaway race for the Red and Blue, which took the lead at the start, and was never headed. Kelly, the first man, gave Kurtz a long lead, and both he and Lockwood widened the gap. Meredith took up the final running and put on steam for a record. Running almost alone, he completed the quarter in 49 4-5. The time for the relay, 3 25 4-5, beats the old freshman record, made by Illinois in 1910, by a full second.

In this event the Michigan freshmen team did not hear the call, and they were then permitted to run against time for place in the event. It was explained that the event was run ten minutes ahead of time, which accounted for this unusual concession being made. Michigan's time, 3 34 4-5, was nine seconds slower than the Red and Blue, which did not affect the result.

Michigan Scores in Mile.

Penn, Michigan, Dartmouth and Virginia came up for the two-mile championship. Hartman, who started for Penn, finished a bad fourth. The Virginia man taking the lead, Steel couldn't better the place. Dartmouth pulled in the lead in the third relay, Bodley continuing in last place. The race developed into a fight between Michigan and Dartmouth and Penn, Virginia for third.

The absence, through illness, of Roy Mercer almost surely cost the Penn team the mile relay championship. As it was, they finished second, close to the heels of Illinois. Craig led off for Penn, finishing fourth in a closely bunched field. MacGowan, who took Mercer's place, held his own in the bunch, while the Illinois runner lengthened out his space in front. This condition continued during the third relay, with Foster as the Pennsylvania man; Lippincott was in fourth relay, running his quarter in 4.08 4-5; the Red and Blue flier cut out from the ruck and closed up the gap between himself and Saunders, the last Illinois man. Saunders' lead was too big, however, and he was still a few feet ahead of Lippincott when he broke the tape. The time was 3 22 4-5.

LOWELL EASY WINNER.

Smother Dover Independents by 20 to 2 Score.

LOWELL, April 26.—The Lowell team of the New England League fairly smothered the Dover Independents at Spalding Park this afternoon. Twenty to 2 was the score. The feature was the batting of Degroff and Miller.

HOLY CROSS WINS OVER TUFTS, 4-2

Murray Pitches Great Game for Worcester College; Bat Out Victory in Sixth.

WORCESTER, April 26.—Holy Cross took the Tufts batsmen into camp today on Fitton Field to the tune of 4 to 2, the local collegians making their winning runs in practically one inning. "Red" Murray, the star twirler of the Holy Cross team, pitched a great game and allowed but few of the Medford players to find his delivery for safeties, while the Purple and White followers found Krefts at the opportune time.

The Medford men scored their first run in the third session and did not add another to it until the final inning, when Murray let up enough to allow them to get two singles, which, aided by an error, netted them their only other run.

Holy Cross earned its first score in the fourth inning and won the game in the sixth, when three of their number crossed the home plate.

Bues Goes to Bisons in Trade for Mann

Manager Stallings of the Boston Nationals last night sent Arthur Bues, recruit third baseman, back to the Buffalo team of the International League, in exchange for Mann, an outfielder from Seattle, who is heralded as a ten seconds' sprinter and a first-class outfielder in general. Bues joins the Bisons at Baltimore.

Bues was given a trial with the Giants last season, but was sent back to Buffalo for more seasoning. Stallings managed the Bisons at that time, and felt that Bues, who was a heavy-sticker on the Pacific coast, was worth further big league trials. So he brought him to Boston. Bues has been ill, which may account for Stallings' decision to send him back and divide third-base work between Devlin and Smith. Moreover, the Pilgrims need a fast young outfielder more than they do infielders.

Pitcher Ira Hogue was sent to Minneapolis last night. He joins the team at Louisville.

WORCESTER WINS.

WORCESTER, April 26.—In a somewhat one-sided but highly interesting exhibition this afternoon Burkett's aggregation of Worcester ball players defeated the Harvard second team 10 to 8, the Cambridge batsmen proving unable to hit the little sphere when a safety was most needed.

WIN IN EXTRA INNING.

Wakefield Town Team Defeats Brown Class 4 to 3.

WAKEFIELD, April 26.—The Wakefield town team, in a ten-inning contest today, defeated the fast Brown Class team of Somerville, 4 to 3.

Abbott, the former star pitcher for the Lynn team of the New England League, was in the box for the home team, striking out eleven men and giving but one base on balls. It looked like the visitors for a win, but Wakefield came back strong in the ninth and tied the score and won in the tenth, after one man had been retired. F. Anderson came across with the winning run, when Bangs was obliged to juggle a hot grounder hit by Bennett.

EVERETT LEADS SUBURBAN LEAGUE

Defeats Melrose High Easily by Score of 10 to 2 in League Game.

Everett jumped into the lead in the race for the Suburban High school baseball pennant at Everett yesterday afternoon by defeating Melrose High 10 to 2. It was a case of Melrose being unable to hit Murray.

Everett reached Leavitt, the Melrose pitcher, for 11 hits. Murray, for Everett, gave but two hits and struck out ten men. The game was full of thrills, despite the uneven score. Pierotti, Everett's star third baseman, was put out of the game in the last of the seventh inning by spraining his ankle at third base.

In the opening inning Everett started the scoring, Hunt, the first man at bat, landing on the first ball across the plate for a two-sacker. "Bucky" Sweetland followed suit with another two-sacker, scoring Hunt, and Captain George Brickley sent a fly over the centre field fence, the longest hit of the year on the grounds, for a home run. "Dutch" Bold struck out, and the only other strike-out during the game was that of Captain Brickley, a strange coincidence, as Brickley and Bold are the two heaviest hitters on Everett's team.

Wild throwing on the part of both teams was responsible for several runs. Sweetland's run in the third inning was made possible by Crawford's wild throw to second, Sweetland advancing to third, and being knocked home by George Brickley. Bold then made a hit to centre garden, scoring Brickley. In the next inning, Pitcher Leavitt's wild throw to second resulted in Joe Brickley scoring on Hunt's single.

Melrose's two tallies were made in the fifth inning on errors by Everett. Dieter reached first on an error and advanced to second when Captain George Brickley made an error on Gately's infield grounder. Crawford reached first on Fitzgerald's error, scoring Dieter, and Gately scored on an error by Pierotti.

Everett tallied in the seventh inning, once by a wild throw by Leavitt and the other on a two-bagger by Pierotti. In the eighth inning Everett scored two more runs, the side being retired by Brickley striking out and Bold sending a fly to centre garden, with the bases full.

Bat's Bride Gives Tips to Wives

Loves Our Boston Next to Nelson

The following story was written exclusively for the Sunday AMERICAN by Mrs. Battling Nelson, who was Miss Fay King before she married the Durable Dane of the prize ring. Mrs. Nelson is in Boston with her husband, who is scheduled to meet Gilbert Gallant of Chelsea in a twelve round bout at the Boston Arena on Tuesday evening.

By MRS. BATTLING NELSON
(Fay King.)

My husband is a pugilist—and I am proud of him—proud of his achievements in the ring and proud to be his wife.

Some people who do not know pugilists personally labor under the impression that they are rough, uncouth men—even brutal. They imagine that they resemble the square-headed bulldog, like men the comic artists have made them.

But just a little chat with any of the young men who have achieved success in the ring would convince these people of their mistake.

During the time I did newspaper writing—before I became "Mrs. Bat"—I met and interviewed a number of the well-known ring favorites, and I found them all to be splendid chaps.

Ambitious—and eager to do their best in their chosen profession—using their earnings to make their parents more comfortable.

Several are married and they have proved themselves to be good and faithful husbands.

Unfortunately, one or two pugilists have sinned, but that should not be held against the many who have been a credit to the game.

Because one minister commits an atrocious outrage, all should not be condemned.

Just What a Boxer Is.

A pugilist is a "trained to the minute athlete"—and to be this he must necessarily lead a clean, regular life if he is at all sincere in his search for success.

Bat is a truly model young man. He neither drinks, smokes, chews nor swears. He is kindness personified—and loves home.

We are having a splendid honeymoon and Boston shall always hold a precious place in our hearts because we've had such a splendid time here.

When the AMERICAN reporter surprised us with a visit yesterday he found us in the joys of a meal at our little apartment.

This is the first chance we've had to enjoy a little home life, and you know, no matter what comfort the big hotels contain, it isn't like home.

How to Be Happy.

Bat does appreciate a happy home. If every husband and every wife would appreciate each other's efforts and not hesitate to voice the praise, happiness would be always present.

I am concentrating my mind upon my home, my husband, my household duties, and for that reason they are assuming proportion and value that are wonderful.

No one can be happy whose mind is divided between past regret and a present condition.

Forget the past, concentrate and appreciate, and you will find unlimited happiness.

We are looking forward to the near future when we shall settle down in our own home—and what a pride we shall both take in it.

Bat a Most Loving Husband.

Ever since Bat first made money as a fighter he has saved and planned for the time when he should have a home of his own.

He has given his folks a nice home; but, naturally, he is more enthusiastic over this one.

He is always buying pennants and other interesting decorations for his den.

Bat is also fond of good books, and we shall have a wonderful library—he already has the works of many of the standard authors—and is always adding to them.

The wife of a pugilist is naturally apt to receive a more severe criticism than she deserves on account of the unjust standard many regard her husband's profession.

If a society matron chatter in a box during a play, or commit any other breach of etiquette, she is forgiven, for the social elect "can do no wrong"—but let me say that if all society men and women were as careful of their actions as the average pugilist and his wife, scandals wouldn't be crowding church notes off the front pages of our daily newspapers.

Battling's tender devotion to my pet canary proves that prize fighters are not brutal outside of business hours, and then only when necessary.

READING GOLF.

READING, April 26.—Harold H. Boardman, assisted by a four handicap, won the first prize in the 18-hole handicap match today, at the Meadow Brook links. The second prize in Class A was won by Rodney W. Brown, who played from scratch.

In Class B the first honors went to J. H. Wilson, who, with a handicap of 10, got a 91 for the course. F. L. Springford, who also annexed a 93, won the second place trophy. The scores follow:

TECH RECORDS GO AT CLASS MEETING

Juniors Win Games With Sophomores Second and Freshman Third.

With one Tech record broken and another equaled, the Tech interclass meet, held at Tech field yesterday afternoon, showed that the Institute team will be a factor in the New England championships.

The juniors won the meet with a total of 64 points. The sophomores took second with 40½, after a race with the freshmen, who gathered 33½ points. The seniors came in last with only 14 points.

The record race was made in the hurdles, A. B. Curtis, '15, finishing in 16 1-5 seconds, just ahead of T. H. Huff, '14. The former record of 16 2-5 seconds is held by Earle Ovington, '04, the noted aviator. Curtis will not be given the record, however, as he knocked down a hurdle.

T. H. Goething, '14, equaled his record of 50 4-5 seconds for the quarter, which he made at Dartmouth last year.

A feature of the meet was the work of C. T. Guething of the freshman class, a brother of the quarter-miler who beat one F. C. Wall, '15, in the mile.

Many Stars in Various Events.

Captain Germain, '13, had things all his own way in the half. A. B. Curtis also ran a fast 220 hurdles. L. A. Wilson, '14, was the star of the dashes, taking both the 100 and 220 events. C. W. Loomis, '16, and W. Adams '16, also showed up strong in the dashes.

"Doc" Leslie, the former Harvard star, had the shot put all to himself.

D. N. MacLeod, '14, won 15 points for the juniors in the field events, taking first in the discus and broad jump, second in the shot and third in the hammer.

Laurason, '16, showed promise in the pole vault. He just missed clearing eleven feet. D. MacLeod, '14, and C. E. Fox, '14, tied for first at 20 feet 3½ inches in the broad jump, but on the jump-off for the medal, Fox added six inches to his distance made in competition.

There were nine events in all, the most exciting of which was furnished in Class C by J. F. INSIDE THE ROPES HAS REAL PUNCH

Philosophy in Plenty Is Revealed in Charley Van Loan's Latest Sport Fiction.

Charley Van Loan, the man who put the punch in sport fiction, has produced a collection of short stories of the prize ring that are gems of brisk literature.

Van Loan, who used to write breezy baseball and football for the Boston AMERICAN and other Hearst newspapers, has written several bright books that have carried the "inside" of sport—its personality, its humor, its characters, its pathos, its tragedies and its romances—away outside of the realms of sport followers, and into the hearts of readers who are popularly supposed to know little and care less about American sports.

As a matter of fact, they do know a lot and Van Loan's stories lead them to care a lot, too. For, actually, almost everybody is interested, at least part of the time, in the various American sports.

Every Story Carries a Punch.

As a matter of fact, every man, woman and child worth while has some particular pet sport. But there are times when they all unite and concentrate their interest. Most of the branches of athletic entertainment at some time or other, therefore, break into the limelight. The "fight game" is one that is always "coming through" with some incident or character that absorbs universal interest and attention.

In the book "Inside the Ropes" Van Loan has collected eleven breezy short stories of the prize ring—every one of them carrying a "punch," as the ring experts would say. The stories have the merit of originality of conception and construction and, as most familiars of the ringside and its characters will attest, are based on actual facts.

There is no branch of endeavor that has so many "characters," of diverse and interesting individuality, as sports and the pugilistic game, for some reason or other, has more than its share. Van Loan has drawn upon some of these for the stories of "Inside the Ropes." He writes them in crisp, snappy style. Very simple, but nevertheless plain, solid human nature, is revealed in these stories and their characters.

A Laugh at Every Stage.

In every tale you find the conclusion altogether "new" and unexpected, and worth while waiting for. You can enjoy a laugh at almost every stage of the journey through the books. Perhaps, even, you may shed a tear now and then. But, for the most part, the comic element completely predominates the pathetic that runs through the careers of these ringside "heroes."

SOMERVILLE HIGH BOWS TO MEDFORD

Red and Blue Team Plays in Hard Luck; Winners Show Up Well.

Somerville High's hopes of leading the Suburban League were shattered yesterday afternoon on the Fulton street grounds, Medford, when Medford walked away with a game to the tune of 6 to 2.

If Somerville ever played in hard luck such was the case yesterday. Somerville failed to nose out a winner on three different occasions when it had five chances to score.

Somerville lacked the snappy playing of the Medford boys. In every way Somerville had the advantage over the home team but in each case failed to use it. Pitcher Donelan, for Medford, kept the hits scattered, and this alone may account for Medford's victory. Somerville was slow in getting around the bases.

Billy Binger Beaten Out in Thrilling Struggle on Medford Track.

With Billy C. and Billy Binger going around the circuit neck and neck the entire distance at the matinee meeting of the Fellsway Driving Club at Combination Park, Medford, yesterday afternoon, followers of the matinees witnessed one of the best races ever fought on the track. Only a few inches separated the two horses as they passed under the wire, with Billy C., driven by Frank Fox, the winner. It was the final heat of a four-heat race.

Weather conditions were perfect for the showing of the horses and good time was made in all of the events.

WILL MAKE ISSUE ON LEGALITY OF MOTOR TAX

The Three A's Contemplates Important Action on Registration Matters.

The question of carrying to the highest court in the land the constitutionality of the automobile registration tax will be considered at the next meeting of the executive board of the American Automobile Association. While there has been an acquiescence for several years on the part of motorists in accepting this tax when the money was expended in highways progress of one kind or another, especially in those States where it was paid in lieu of a personal property tax, the Legislatures of the past Winter have shown such a marked inclination to increase fees to an exorbitant degree that the A. A. A. officers have taken up the matter with the State divisions of the national body, with the result that President Laurens Enos appointed a special committee to prepare and present a report at the meeting to be held in Baltimore, May 8.

William H. Hotchkiss of New York is chairman of the committee, with Lewis R. Speare of Massachusetts and H. M. Rowe of Maryland as his associates. Charles Thaddeus Terry, chairman of the A. A. A. Legislative Board, who has had much to do with the framing of motor laws in many parts of the country, will assist the committee in the preparation of its report, which is going to be unusually thorough.

When the registration tax has been in lieu of all other taxes and the money used exclusively for road maintenance, as in New York State, there has been slight objection on the part of the motorists over the unconstitutional discrimination against one class of road users as long as the amounts paid were within reason. The protest recently has accumulated strength in those States in which the owners of motor vehicles are [illegible] to pay a registration tax personal property tax, and still another tax for the driving of the car. Double taxation and discrimination against one class of road users are the two points which invite attack on the ground of unconstitutionality.

The case that may be carried up originated in New Jersey, which State calls for three payments by the automobile owner: Registration of car, driving license and property tax. The A. A. A. State organization instituted the suit, which has had adverse decisions in the New Jersey courts.

E. S. KELLY RESIGNS.

Mr. E. S. Kelly has resigned the presidency of the Kelly-Springfield Motor Truck Company because of ill health.

Mr. J. L. Geddes, formerly general manager of the Detroit City Gas Company, was nominated by Mr. Kelly to succeed to the presidency of the Kelly-Springfield Motor Truck Company. Mr. Geddes has scored successfully in the management of large industrial corporations.

BIG FIELD FOR HOOSIER RACE

Nineteen Speed Merchants Have Entered, but Management Expect 30 in 500-Mile Race.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 26.—The third annual 500-mile International Sweepstakes race will be held at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway May 30, holding the attention of motor enthusiasts the world over. Heretofore the race has been open to cars having a piston displacement of 600 cubic inches or less, but this year the announcement is that in order to qualify for entrance cars must have a piston displacement of not more than 450 cubic inches. This gives the manufacturers the chance to enter cars of the regular stock class, and it also prevents freak powerful giant racers from running away from the cars of more ordinary size.

Although the entry lists do not close until May 1, nineteen cars have been entered for the 500-mile race, which is five more than were entered at this time last year. Thirty cars will be allowed to start in the coming race, and it is believed that the list will be filled besides allowing for some entries which may fail to pass the preliminary speed trials which will be held before the race. In order to qualify a car must be able to show an average speed of seventy-five miles an hour, and in the event that more than thirty cars remain in the field following these preliminaries some of the three-car teams may be reduced to two cars.

The entry of drivers discloses the names of many veterans, men who have helped to make racing history and who are noted for their skill and daring. In fact, with the exception of one or two men, there is not a driver entered so far who is not widely known throughout the racing fraternity. Following is the list of cars together with the drivers who are now entered for the race:

"Ned" Broadwell Returns to Fisk

E. H. Broadwell, who is probably one of the best known men in the motor trade of America, and who recently resigned the vice presidency of the Hudson Motor Car Company, has assumed a similar position with the Fisk Rubber Company.

Mr. Broadwell was for many years prior to his connection with the motor car company prominently identified with the Fisk Company, and it is not surprising to learn that he has returned to the fold. Mr. Broadwell's headquarters will be at the home office in Chicopee Falls and he will give his personal attention to the direction of the sales department.

The Fisk Rubber Company and Mr. Broadwell are both to be congratulated on this combination, which bespeaks greater prestige for both.

MOTOR BUS STREET LINE.

The city of Huntington, Ind., has declined to grant a franchise for a street car line and has substituted in its place a motor omnibus service under a twenty-year franchise. Huntington is the first American city to adopt motor buses to the absolute exclusion of street cars. Four motor buses for this service have been built by the White company of Cleveland, Ohio.

Hupmobile

In quality and soundness of construction and materials—

In style and good looks—

In ability to cover a stated number of miles of road in a day—

In stamina and durability—

Even in passenger capacity—

The Hupmobile meets the larger car on a dead level of equality.

These characteristics are so pronounced—and have played so large a part in the wonderful spread of the Hupmobile's popularity among all classes of car buyers—that the Hupmobile has truly become the Car of the American Family.

It is because of these qualifications that the Hupmobile meets the approval of and comes within the reach of the man of moderate means.

The prestige of the big car for the upkeep of a small one—that's what the Hupmobile stands for—and you will find its benefits and its pleasures beyond any price.

It has broadened the social life of hundreds—yes, thousands—of families.

It has broken the monotony of city-bound days; it has taken them to the country for week-ends and holiday trips.

It has brought them into closer touch with friends who had long remained at the end of the telephone wire or a mail route.

You have long known of the Hupmobile's reputation for economy. Aside from the initial cost, the Hupmobile will mean important savings in the low cost of maintenance—the rarity of repairs and the small consumption of oil and gasoline for the mileage obtained.

The Hupmobile is widely noted for its fuel economy; and in this respect we invite comparison with any other car of equal weight and size. The Hupmobile's lightness also means longer tire wear.

And this is only part of the story.

It goes back to the quality of materials used—the goodness and toughness of the steels; it includes the character of the mechanical design; its simplicity, the compact construction of the unit power plant; the remarkable effectiveness of a single oiling system for motor, clutch, transmission, etc.

Build your summer plans around a Hupmobile.

Give your loved ones such a summer as they have never known, with this sturdy Car of the American Family.

Let it be the center of your summer activities, aside from business—and even there you will find it a great comfort and convenience.

The Hupmobile dealer will gladly demonstrate the car for you and your family. All you have to do is arrange the time. Do that now

MOTOR TRUCK MEN SAY INCREASED FEE BILL IS DOOMED

Various Commercial Power Vehicle Associations and Users Are Making a Big Fight to Defeat Proposed Legislation on Registration

By J. C. KERRISON.

The motor truck bill now being considered by the Legislature is to have a tempestuous voyage before it reaches its final resting place. The bill, it is felt, places a very heavy and unnecessary tax upon a business industry and it is unquestionably a manifest injustice to owners.

The contention is made that the reason for the proposed increase of fees is to repair the damages made by trucks to the State highways. This contention is hardly supported by facts and figures. An expert has stated that only 3 per cent of the trucks now in the State use the State highways, or—to be more precise—those highways which are under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts Highway Commission.

To levy a fee on all trucks to repair damages created by 3 per cent might, of course, be a just and equitable one, but if that additional money is to be raised from motor trucks for this work, a certain portion of the receipts should be given to cities and towns to be used by the various municipalities in the construction and maintenance of roads other than those under the caption of State highways.

In the past the Massachusetts Highway Commission has felt that when it needed any further revenue that all they had to do was to place a tax on the motor owner and let him stand the additional expense. The owner heretofore has been pretty generous and has accepted the burden, but the burden has now reached that point where to add any more might have the tendency to create much the same condition as did the last straw added to the camel's load.

The motorists now feel that they are paying all that is fair and equitable. They are paying for the registration of their cars, they are paying for the licensing of themselves and, in addition thereto, they are paying a property tax on their machines. To increase this burden no matter how small, seems to them as unnecessary and unfair.

The action of the Massachusetts Highway Commission in repudiating its agreement with the truck men and inducing the Committee on Roads and Bridges to report a measure different from that jointly agreed upon has brought forth some very severe criticism.

It is now the purpose of the truck associations and owners interested in this measure to bring about so emphatic a protest against the bill that it will be so effectively defeated that it will not come up again for a couple of years at least.

Heretofore, the motorists have accepted the conditions as they existed without any attempt to test the legality of the automobile registration law, but the American Automobile Association, as told in another section of this paper, is now preparing to make a test case and carry it to the highest court within the land.

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

No Extra Price

We cut the price on No-Rim-Cut tires about 11 per cent in April.

Partly because of lower rubber—partly through multiplied output.

Now these oversize tires—these tires that can't rim-cut—are sold as low as any standard clincher tires.

Your Choice

Now, at the same price, you have this choice:

You may get a hooked-base clincher tire of which 23 per cent become rim-cut.

Or you may get, at the same cost, a No-Rim-Cut tire which never can be rim-cut.

You may get an old-type clincher tire, barely rated size.

Or you may get, without an extra penny, a tire ten per cent larger in air capacity. An extra capacity which, on the average, gives 25 per cent more mileage.

What Men Buy

Of course many tire users, out of fixed habit, cling to old-type tires. Some have used them since bicycle days.

They are content with their tire mileage, only because they don't know what their neighbors get.

But hundreds of thousands have come to No-Rim-Cut tires. And legions of new users start every month.

Goodyear tires, because of this new type, far outsell every other tire.

Over a million sold in the past 12 months. That's more than we sold in 12 years before that.

Come see these tires. See the non-skid tread, the oversize, the No-Rim-Cut feature. You are bound to adopt them then.

RAPID FIRE SALES SECURED

Extensive Educational Campaign Is Being Conducted by the Rambler People.

Rapid fire sales and advertising methods introduced to keep pace with the big strides being made toward manufacturing perfection in building motor cars will characterize an unusual campaign just started by The Thomas B. Jeffery Company, in which 635 Cross Country dealers are participating.

Indicative of the speed and high efficiency demanded in all industries, the Jeffery people have formed a partnership with 750 daily newspapers throughout the United States in a six weeks educational campaign in which every Jeffery dealer, salesman and employe will participate.

In past years many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in national publications, newspapers and farm papers to popularize the Jeffery product. Very often as much as $10,000 has been paid for one insertion in one publication for the announcement of a new model or new features of the Jeffery car.

The purpose of the whole campaign is to familiarize the American people with the stability of the Jeffery Company and the service organization which puts the Cross Country car in the lead from the standpoint of the owner.

"We called our salesmen together," said E. S. Jordan, secretary of the Jeffery Company, "and solicited the opinion of every single one of our dealers. The question we put to them was this: 'What is the best way to everlastingly cement in the mind of the American public the superiority of the Cross Country, the extent of our wonderful service organization, the size and equipment of our manufacturing facilities and the character of our product?'

"A vote was taken. Ninety-seven per cent. of all dealers and salesmen voted for newspaper advertising. We have spent many hundreds of thousands of dollars in other channels and in the future we will quite likely spend more in the same way, but for quick results we have chosen to form a partnership with the newspapers of this country, and for the next six weeks seven hundred and fifty of them will be joined with us in this campaign.

"The list includes the leading farm papers of the country, and every time a dealer starts out to see a prospect or a salesman calls upon a dealer, he will carry with him as ammunition a series of striking advertisements which have been prepared for this campaign. While newspaper advertising has been used in this way before, never has such an extensive campaign been so carefully prepared in its every detail."

KISSEL AMBULANCES.

The Kissel Motor Car Company seems to be making a record in sales of ambulances to municipalities. The latest sales of this kind reported by the Wisconsin concern are to the cities of Milwaukee and St. Paul.

An Abundance of Speed Traps

Motorists Are Given Warning So They May Avoid Troubles.

The automobile Legal Association this week sends out some interesting information relative to traps in this section as follows:

BOSTON, MASS.

Tremont street—Between Park street and Keith's Theatre. Trap for exceeding 15 miles an hour between 7 and 10:30 p. m.

Beacon street—From Massachusetts avenue to Arlington street. Traps going both ways. Keep down to 15 miles and sound horn at corners.

On approaching corner at Charlesgate East slow down and sound horn. Between railroad bridge and Audubon Circle keep down to 15 miles an hour.

Commonwealth avenue—Trap between Charlesgate East and Massachusetts avenue in both directions.

Between Massachusetts avenue and Arlington street slow down and blow horn upon approaching all intersecting ways. Trap is worked from 7:30 to 10 30 p. m.

Between St. Mary's street and the Jewish Temple, slow down and give signal on approaching intersecting ways.

Columbus avenue—Between Berkeley street and Massachusetts avenue several ¼ mile traps. Do not exceed 15 miles and sound horn at all intersecting ways.

Between Camden street and Roxbury crossing several speed traps for exceeding 15 miles upon approaching crossings and failing to give timely signal.

Smoking cars are frequently stopped on Beacon Hill and elsewhere in the congested parts of the city. Rear number plates should be illuminated so as to display registered number 60 feet away.

The police authorities of Newton have established a motorcycle patrol covering Commonwealth avenue both day and night, and while the authorities of Newton have always been reasonable and fair in the enforcement of the law, and will doubtless continue to be so, they are determined to stop the excessive speeding which has heretofore been indulged on Commonwealth avenue.

A few months ago the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts decided that a street car is a vehicle within the meaning of the law of the road, and that decision required an automobilist to pass a street car on the left as he would any other vehicle, but the Legislature has since remedied this by passing a law declaring street cars to be not vehicles within the meaning of that law, so that now street cars may be passed on the right, though all other vehicles must be passed on the left.

BLAKE GOES TO NEW YORK.

When Kenneth M. Blake left Boston yesterday to assume his new duties in New York city he carried with him evidence of friendship and respect of the bulk of the Boston automobile world. Blake was always a popular man in this city and his friends were legion.

His ever courteous treatment to all has earned for him a position high in the esteem of all who came into contact with him. He was popular with everyone, decidedly so with automobile newspaper men of this city. As an expression of their friendship, the automobile writers one day last week entertained him at luncheon at the Hotel Lenox and presented to him a little token of their regard.

FOREIGN CAR TO RACE AT ELGIN

Prospects for a Large Entry List for National Trophy Good.

Competition of at least one foreign car, driven by one of the most prominent European drivers, is assured the Chicago Automobile Club and the Elgin Automobile Road Racing Association for the fourth annual road races over the Kane county circuit next August by the announcement made by F. C. Patterson, the Chicago sportsman, that he has signed M. Pietie of Brussels, Belgium, to drive the Mercedes Knight at Elgin.

The car and driver also are to compete in the 500-mile race on the Indianapolis speedway on May 30, and they are being brought to this country by Mr. Patterson with the main idea of having them carry his colors in the western road racing classic. The car will take part in both the events at Elgin—the Cobe cup event for cars 230 inches and under the first day, and the Elgin National trophy for cars 450 inches and under the second day.

The Mercedes-Knight is the same one that took part in the famous Belgian team event last Summer. Although not a speed contest, the little car made one lap of thirty miles over hilly country roads at the rate of [illegible] miles an hour. It is a four-cylinder with a bore of 4 [illegible] inches and a stroke of 5.91 inches. The motor is a sliding sleeve Knight and the Indianapolis and Elgin events will mark the first appearance of this motor in American competition.

Although blanks have not been issued for the Elgin races the promoters already have started on the hunt for entries. Fred J. Wagner of New York who again will start the classics is busy lining up candidates, and he ventures the prediction that he will get at least ten cars from Eastern territory, while the West should do even better. It also is likely that the Peugeots and Sunbeam which will compete at Indianapolis, also will remain in this country for the Elgin meet.

Out at Elgin work on preparing the course already has started. For the first time the Kane County Highway Commissioners have taken an interest in the proposition and on their own accord they are widening the backstretch, cutting down hills and bumps there and they also are scraping and grading the entire circuit. In addition to this the Elgin Automobile Road Race Association will spend considerable on still further improving the course.

R-C-H Average Speed Was High

Although the R-C-H Corporation has never officially entered into racing events of any kind, R-C-H cars entered by dealers or branches in various parts of the country have participated in events of this kind with remarkable success. The latest of these is the performance of an R-C-H car in the first road race held recently on the new Owensmouth course, just outside of Los Angeles. In this event the R-C-H went the distance of 241 miles in average time of about sixty miles per hour, and by its work won a special trophy for its class. Competing simultaneously in the event were special racing cars driven by Teddy Tetzlaff and Barney Oldfield, Tetzlaff winning the big car event.

The R-C-H went through the entire race with no mechanical troubles whatever, making but two stops; one for tire change and one for oil and gasoline.

The R-C-H car which took part in the race is historic on the coast, being the first of the type ever sent to that section and the second car out of the R-C-H factory. It was driven by Al. Rockledge, an employe of the Los Angeles branch, who showed remarkable skill and ability in his first race. It was a stock car in every particular, making its performance all the more remarkable.

There are many rumors afloat at the present time that the R-C-H will go into the racing game extensively this season, but company officials declare that there will be no definite campaign conducted by the factory, although it is understood that dealers will take considerable part in such events in their own territories.

TRUCKS DO GREAT WORK.

Two light Studebaker trucks have been steadily at work in Dayton ever since the flood, operating a transportation line between that city and Springfield, Ohio, and bringing in a steady stream of supplies. The trucks were loaned by the Studebaker Corporation and are in charge of factory drivers.

Speaking of Shock Absorbers—

The new Truffault-Hartford Automatic is the last word. Its action is entirely automatic, and it supplies exactly the right amount of frictional resistance that every change in road condition demands. This latest improvement in shock absorbers requires practically no adjustment of any kind. Easily attached to any car and equally effective on both stiff and highly flexible springs. Unlike others, it does not mar the car's appearance. Come in and see it.

GROWTH AND TREND OF THE MOTOR TRUCK

It Is Estimated That 51,586 Commercial Motor Vehicles Will Be Made in 1913.

Surprisingly rapid growth of the commercial vehicle industry is evidenced by reports of production received from manufacturing companies during February and March, 1913, by the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers. The results of this second census of the industry by the association are given in detail in a statistical report just issued to the trade and are compared with the results of the previous census to show the increases in output and the fluctuations in average prices from year to year.

The total output of commercial vehicles of all kinds and types reported for the year 1912 by 170 companies was 21,939, as compared with a total of 10,655 reported for the year 1911 by eighty-five companies, and 10,374 reported for all preceding years combined up to the end of 1910 by the same eighty-five companies. It is believed the companies represented about 75 per cent of the total production of the country, while the 170 companies reporting 1912 and 1913 production represent [illegible] 90 per cent of the total output.

The estimated production for the year 1913 is 51,586 vehicles.

The figures given show that each year's output closely approximates the total output of all preceding years combined, thus:

Reported output prior to 1911	10,374 [illegible]
Reported output during 1911	10,655 [illegible]
	[illegible]
Reported output during 1912	21,939 plus 10% = [illegible]
	[illegible]
Estimated output during 1913	51,586 plus 10% = 56,744

This is a rate of growth of approximately 200 per cent. annually.

The total value of vehicles reported made in 1912 was $42,942,828, and of the estimated reported production in 1913, $98,288,872. These figures compare with an aggregate value of $22,292,321 for the vehicles produced in 1911, and of $20,485,231 for all vehicles manufactured prior to the end of 1910.

With the exception of a dozen or fifteen companies, all of those that failed to send in reports are relatively new companies that produced few or no vehicles last year, or are older companies whose individual output probably did not reach fifty vehicles in any case.

The data furnished in the reports provide a valuable index of the growth and trend of the motor truck industry. Some makers may be disappointed in their expectations for the present year, but on the whole the estimates of production for 1913 are believed to be fairly conservative, as nothing was to be gained by any manufacturer in exaggerating his figures, because the census was a secret one in which names of companies were not to be attached to the reports.

Reports received from the 170 companies are classified as follows: Gasoline vehicle makers 140, electric 20, mixed system 3, gasoline fire apparatus 7, tricars 3, tractors 2, steam 1. The gas-electric vehicles and the tractors are made by the electric and gas vehicle makers.

DATE SET FOR GLIDDEN TOUR

Will Start in Minneapolis and Will Terminate in Yellowstone Park.

July 11 is the date decided upon for the start of the A. A. A. National Reliability tour, the name given to the Glidden tour. Arrangements are rapidly being made by the Minnesota Automobile Association, in co-operation with the A. A. A. touring information board.

The route as decided upon leaves the Twin Cities, following the Northwest Trail to Fargo, N. D., where a northward turn is made to Grand Forks, and then west, following the general line of the Great Northern Railway through North Dakota and Montana to Havre. So far it follows the route of the St. Paul-Helena run of the Minnesota State Association of two years ago. From Havre a new line will be surveyed nearly direct across Eastern Montana to Glacier National Park which will be the formal end of the tour. After running into and through the park a rendezvous has been arranged at Kalispell, Mont., coincident with the good roads meeting of the Montana Good Roads Congress, which has already been arranged.

A large number of entries have already been made, particularly from St. Paul and Minneapolis, and it is expected that the list of participants will be as large as in any one of the former tours, irrespective of the fact that the tours have been made in more populous territory.

Glacier Park is a terminus of [illegible] importance from the fact that automobiles are allowed on the government roads there, as is not the case as yet with Yellowstone National Park. Participants will be encouraged to return over the roads to [illegible] Missoula and Butte or Helena to Livingston and Gardiner, where they may leave their cars and make stage trips in Yellowstone National Park.

Big Shipment of Velie Cars to Hub

"The new Velie 32 has proven such a thoroughly popular car, not only in New England but all over the country, that it has kept the big Velie factory at Moline, Ill., running night and day to keep up with orders," says Manager Bradfield of the Boston branch.

"Right now two big freight cars loaded with Velie 32's are leaving the factory every day for the Boston branch. This month twenty-four cars a week and it just about keeps up with our deliveries.

"Of course, there is a good reason why the new 32 is such a popular and successful car. In the first place, it is a thoroughly good car embodying the same high grade construction which has always characterized the Velie product. Then it is equipped with the very best of modern conveniences, including Gray & Davis electric starter and lighting system, Bosch magneto, etc., and furthermore, it is backed by the Velie guarantee and service."

KISSEL POPULAR ON COAST.

One-fifth of the entire output of Kissel Kars, both pleasure and commercial vehicles, has been taken under contract for a term of years by the new Pacific Kissel Kar Branch, a California corporation recently organized with a capital of $500,000.

Truck and Truck Tire Economy

On Tire Depends Actual Worth of Truck, Declares T. J. Glenn, Firestone Manager.

On the tire, as much as anything else, depends the actual worth of a truck or other delivery vehicle. This is the unanimous opinion of truck owners everywhere who have kept account of their truck expense, says T. J. Glenn of the Firestone Tire Co.

If your tires fail to protect the truck from the shocks of travel, if they are [illegible] the grinding weight of the truck and load to be carried entirely by the chassis and springs, expense and repairs must of necessity pile up.

There was a time when motor trucks were of light weight and were used for light deliveries only. All that was necessary then to have car protection and tire service was to make highly resilient tire and form it through the tubing machine.

But all that is changed. Trucks have become heavier and their loads enormous. A molded tire such as was made several years ago, would grind away, and shred to nothing in a short time. It couldn't stand the burn of road friction or the crushing weight of the load.

The modeled class of tire is still used for the light vehicle. But it has required all the designing genius, as well as the closest study in the Firestone laboratories, to evolve tires which will care for the heavy loads.

For heavy service the tire must be [illegible] sufficient [illegible] the [illegible], and yet must be [illegible] enough to give the most mileage possible.

[illegible] example of this is found [illegible] base, [illegible]. This tire which is designed [illegible] service and under [illegible] extra heavy and extra resilient Firestone rubber with [illegible] in the tread.

Friction Drive Car Is Economical

"The friction-drive car is the most economical car made, no matter from what angle you analyze it," says George Weatherbee, the New England distributor of the Cartercar and the Metz, both of which are gearless automobiles.

"The fact that they have no transmission to rip out of gears to strip means a big saving in itself. The transmission is the one feature of an automobile that is constantly causing trouble, largely because the operator does not know how to handle his speeds or throw his clutch in at the proper time.

"With the friction driven Cartercar this is all done away with. You have only one lever and as many speeds as you desire. There are no gears and no transmission. If you need to substitute a new drive it is only a matter of a few dollars. It is a well-known fact that the friction driven cars are very superior in operation economy on gasoline and [illegible] with any car made."

MANAGER NEWCOMB BACK.

Manager E. C. Newcomb of the Dayton Airless Tires Company, who returned to Boston yesterday after a week's visit to the factory in Dayton, brings with him some photographs of the conditions prevailing in the city during the time of the flood. Mr. Newcomb says that his factory has recovered from its inundation and is now running full time and is in a position to take care of its business.

AMERICA WILL BE REPRESENTED AT ROAD CONGRESS

The American Automobile Association Will Have Interest in Meetings Abroad.

With the purpose of taking its proper position in the world of motoring, the American Automobile Association has made arrangements whereby it will be represented at two most important international gatherings. The first of these is the Ligue Internationale des Associations Touristes Congress, at Amsterdam, June 18-21, when the association's delegate will be Bernard Van H. Schultz of New Jersey, who is making a 5,000-mile tour of Europe. Mr. Schultz has been a most extensive European motor traveler and in the course of his several tours abroad he has traversed practically all of the important mountain passes.

For the International Road Congress, to take place in London, June 23-28, of which the A. A. A. is also a member, James H. Cook of Alabama has been appointed. This assemblage of roads enthusiasts of the world will be a most important affair, and it is not unlikely that the A. A. A. will have several delegates in addition to the one already selected. Mr. Schultz may arrange to join Mr. Cook who, in company with Major W. W. Crosby of Maryland will precede his visit to London with an automobile tour of the Continent.

Illustrating the world-wide extent of automobiling and the increasing co-operation among the various organizations, reciprocal relations are being established between the Nippon Automobile Club and the American Automobile Association as a result of action at the recent meeting of the A. A. A. executive board. The Japanese association particularly urges Americans to visit unexplored Japan, and the Nippon club will supply all necessary routes and information as to the best roads. It is suggested that the most tourable months are March, April and May and the latter part of September, continuing into October and November.

NEW MAXWELL DUE.

The new Maxwell 35-4 is daily expected by the M. B. M. Motor Company of this city, distributors of the Maxwell cars. Manager Charles A. Malley said yesterday that the large Dayton plants of this company are now in full operation, having fully recovered from the effects of the recent floods. Daily shipments of the Maxwell are being made, an allotment having been shipped from that city to Boston yesterday.

The new Maxwell 35-4 is a completely equipped five-passenger touring car with a self-starter included. It has all the features that have made the latest Maxwell most famous, including the sliding gear transmission, leather cone face clutch, dual ignition, left hand drive and centre control.

LARGEST CIRCULATION IN NEW ENGLAND

BOSTON TO BE SHIPBUILDING WORLD CENTRE

Schwab Business Associate Predicts Greatest Ships Will Be Built Here.

$1,250,000 IN QUINCY DEAL

Talk of Employing 7,000 More Men at Enlarged Fore River Plant.

The purchase of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company by the Bethlehem Steel Company, which is controlled by Charles M. Schwab, is to make Boston the greatest shipbuilding centre in the world. This is the prediction of a business associate of Mr. Schwab.

Mr. Schwab's associate, who was in Boston yesterday, declared that the change in ownership will mean not only the building of the world's biggest ships in Greater Boston, but may eventually mean work for 10,000 employes—more than three times as many as were employed by the Fore River Company. The associate of the millionaire steel king asked that his name be withheld for business reasons.

In an interview this associate stated that with the change of owners there will be brought to Boston the building of giant vessels, the contracts for which now go to Harland & Wolff in England. He pointed out that as Mr. Schwab is now the strongest rival of the famous Krupp works in Germany in the manufacture of guns and armor plate, this fact will mean the construction of many of the largest warships in Boston, as well as the "giants" of the merchant marine.

Schwab Paid $1,250,000.

It became known yesterday that the price paid by the Bethlehem company was about $1,250,000. This will work out under $40 a share for the preferred stock, according to the Boston News Bureau, while the common stock of $2,400,000 receives nothing. The sale was announced exclusively in the AMERICAN Friday afternoon. It is understood Rear Admiral Francis T. Bowles, U. S. N., retired, will remain at the head of the company.

Regarding what the sale means for Boston and Massachusetts, Mr. Schwab's business associate said:

"There are only four plants in America where battleships and the largest commercial ships can be built, and to have Mr. Schwab with his own unlimited resources, said to be $50,000,000 and the capitalization of the Bethlehem Steel Company behind him, take over this Massachusetts plant must put Boston and Massachusetts into the forefront in building warships and the largest business ships.

May Add 7,000 Employes.

"The plant now employs 3,000 men, and the talk is that as many as 10,000 men will be employed under the new regime.

"The present plant, through insufficient capital and the fact that it was a bankers' shipbuilding company—while it has built many large vessels, both for war and for business—has never been a financial success because there were no real shipbuilders or steel men connected with it until Admiral Bowles came, and he has been practically the only one with technical knowledge and plans. The Admiral and Mr. Schwab are old friends and were together in London when the contracts were signed for the Argentine battleships, which were built in this yard. Massachusetts built them and Mr. Schwab furnished armor plate.

Believes in Welfare Work.

"Mr. Schwab believes in welfare work and at his other plants has clubhouses, baseball fields and Christian associations, and he says he prides himself more on the Bethlehem Steel Works' band, which he declares 'is the finest band in the world,' than he does on his armor and his guns. And it is to be expected that similar comforts, pleasures and recreations are in store for the Quincy workmen.

"Massachusetts is to be the seat, undoubtedly, of what will be in time the greatest shipbuilding plant in the world.

"Mr. Schwab will, in Massachusetts, build up a plant, through his foreign as well as domestic connections and his unlimited means, that will bring to this State the building of vessels which now go to Harland & Wolff in England.

Owns Ore Beds in Chile.

"Mr. Schwab has recently bought ore beds in Chile, the largest in the world, and is now building eight vessels to transport the ore through the canal for the use of his Bethlehem steel works. It is reasonable to suppose that, owning the raw material, the steel, which makes the armor and the guns, and this, as well as other shipbuilding plants, he can underbid the world.

"Admiral Bowles, who was a great naval constructor when in the navy, now, with the backing of Mr. Schwab, is going to have an unlimited field for his talents, which means more ships built here, more money spent here, and the building up of an industry on the Atlantic seaboard, where the proprietor practically owns everything that goes into a vessel.

"Mr. Schwab is always spectacular in his achievements, but he is also one of the greatest captains of industry and business men in the world, as shown by his achievement in building up the bankrupt Bethlehem Steel Company to be a dividend payer and the greatest rival of the Steel Trust. He will make Boston and Massachusetts the greatest shipbuilding centre in the world."

Boys, Beware! Girls Advised to Carry Canes for Defence

Not That They Really Need Them, but Mr. Healy Thinks They May.

Young women who have occasion to walk across Boston Common unescorted in the evening should carry walking sticks in the opinion of H. E. Healy.

Mr. Healy says he has seen young women accosted frequently and he thinks any girl would be justified in carrying a cane for a weapon.

He sends this letter to the AMERICAN.

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

> I would like to make one suggestion to your paper. Girls should start the style of carrying walking sticks, especially in the evening.
> As I walk across the Common in the evening, I often notice well-bred and educated girls unescorted walking peacefully along the paths and very often some young man who feels that he has reached the height of manhood, but who on the contrary hasn't a spark in his whole body walk boldly up to some unfortunate girl and accost her.
> The girl has no way of defending herself, but if it was the style for girls to carry walking sticks, I am sure she wouldn't be approached so often, and if she was, I am sure she would be justified in striking her would-be escort across the nose in a manner that would have some effect upon his small brain.
> H. E. HEALY, Yours respectfully.
> St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston.

Mr. Healy takes it for granted that the girls found the young men's attentions objectionable. He is very chivalrous.

Harvard Intruders Get "Silence" Cure

They Interrupted Percy Wendell's Address on Cocoanuts and He Sat Right Down.

The "nothing doing" treatment is the latest successful method at Harvard of discouraging intruders, without asking them to leave.

Professor Winter gives a course in Public Speaking in Sanders Theatre, Memorial Hall, to collegians who aspire to become orators.

Percy Wendell, the football star, had prepared a speech on the entertaining subject: "The Botanical Growth of the Cocoanut."

Young Mr. Wendell was beginning his speech when two middle-aged men strolled into the room and sat down, as though they were in a public hall.

Professor Winter did not order the intruders out. Instead he calmly directed Wendell to sit down.

Deep silence prevailed. Wendell sat motionless. Other students scanned their notebooks.

After six minutes of gazing about the two visitors realized that their presence was "delaying the game," as card players say. They rose and walked hastily out.

"You may continue, Mr. Wendell," said Professor Winter, and Wendell did.

Honest Labels Must Go on Storage Eggs

No More "Fresh" and "Selected" Signs; Foss Signs Sullivan Bill; Victory for Cassidy.

Governor Foss has signed a bill passed by both houses of the Legislature, which will tend to end the sale of cold storage eggs as "fresh."

Harry P. Cassidy, the AMERICAN'S food expert, when he first came to Boston, exposed the deceitful labels placed on baskets of eggs by store keepers. He showed how "Hennery" eggs, "Strictly Fresh," "Selected" and other grades, sold at retail, were often merely storage eggs separated in different boxes and ranged at different prices.

The bill signed by the Governor was introduced by Representative Lewis R. Sullivan of East Boston. It provides that when cold storage eggs are sold at retail the basket or other container in which the eggs are displayed shall be plainly and conspicuously labelled "Cold storage eggs."

A penalty of from $10 to $500 fine is provided for violations of the law.

READ LOVE NOTES IN SUIT BY WIFE

Mrs. Bruce Accused of Sending Soulful Epistles to Husband of Mrs. Harrison.

WOMAN'S NOSE WAS BROKEN

When the case of Mrs. Rachel Harrison comes up before Judge Ely in the poor debtors' court tomorrow morning more love letters, alleged to have been written by Mrs. Lulu Bruce to the husband of Mrs. Harrison, will be introduced. These love letters, full of love and devotion, will form an important part in the case.

It is alleged that when Mrs. Bruce wrote to Mr. Harrison she concluded her epistle with the endearing term of "Forever yours, Lulu."

Mrs. Harrison claims that Mrs. Bruce agreed to pay her $500, or one-tenth of the amount she sued for to recover for the loss of her husband's love and devotion.

The present action has been brought by Mrs. Harrison to determine why Mrs. Bruce should not pay the $500, according to the alleged agreement.

The suit for $5,000 was entered by Mrs. Harrison in December, 1911. There were conferences. Mrs. Harrison claims she was induced to drop the suit with the promise that Mrs. Bruce would pay her one-tenth of the damages sought as heart balm. Mrs. Harrison said she waited patiently for the settlement. Now Mrs. Bruce has resorted to the poor debtor's oath.

Letters Introduced.

Letters which it was claimed were written by Mrs. Bruce to Mr. Harrison and intercepted by the wife were introduced at the hearing yesterday. An extract from one read as follows:

> My Dear Love—I write you before supper and I write you after supper because you are the nearest and dearest to my heart.

Part of another read:

> Philip dear,
> For two days I have received no word from you and I am nearly insane. I have paced the floor since five this morning.
> I will go to Pittsburg whether you want to see me or not and then I don't care whether I die or not. For God's sake send for me or come back.
> Forever yours, Lulu.

An extract from another letter read:

> My dear sweetheart.
> I have your letter and am so happy. I have been in the depths of perdition, but now I am happy again. Love and kisses to you. Lou.

Broke Rival's Nose.

Mrs. Harrison said she first discovered that Mrs. Bruce had taken the affections of her husband one day in the Spring of 1911 when she found Mr. Harrison and Mrs. Bruce walking on the Charles River esplanade. She attacked Mrs. Bruce and broke her nose. Lulu had to go to a hospital for several weeks for treatment after this. Later when her husband went to work in Pittsburgh, Mrs. Harrison claimed she intercepted the letters.

In the suit filed by Mrs. Harrison the date of the alienation is placed at some time between May 1, 1911, and October 27, 1911. Attorney Mitchell Freeman, counsel for Mrs. Harrison, said that before the suit was brought he called on Mrs. Bruce at the Hotel Oxford and talked to her about her relations with Mr. Harrison. He said that when he left Lulu after the conversation she took poison. A doctor was called and she was saved from becoming a suicide.

Still Loves Her Husband.

"I have been married twenty-two years and I have had six children. Three are now dead. I loved my husband and love him today. We were so happy until she took him away from me. Two years ago she came into his life and from that time on he changed. I spoke to him about the change in his manner toward me and he said that this woman had a spell over him which he could not remove. She has wrecked his life. He has gone from me, and I do not know where he is."

During the recital of this story Mrs. Harrison shook with emotion. Big tears welled up in her eyes and rolled down her cheeks.

Mrs. Bruce testified she was married in 1902 to Waldo A. Bruce, a glazier. She removed her wedding ring to show the attorneys the date of her marriage engraved inside it.

GHENT FAIR OPENED.

King Albert of Belgium Personally Starts the Exposition.

GHENT, Belgium, April 26.—King Albert of the Belgians opened the International Exposition here this afternoon. The simple ceremony was performed in the Palace of Festivities, where the King stood amid tens of thousands of rhododendrons, azaleas and blooming rose trees while he touched the button opening the gates to the general public. The King was accompanied by Queen Elizabeth and their oldest son, Prince Leopold, and the royal party visited every part of the exposition. The streets of the city are set with Venetian masts painted in the national colors. At the exposition France has the most complete exhibit of any foreign country.

Financier's Heir Just an Average Youth

"Junius Spencer Morgan."

Twenty times the name appeared in the will of the great American king of finance.

The last will and testament of J. Pierpont Morgan disposed of untold millions.

There were $20,000,000 of bequests. It will be fully a year before the world will know the value of the [illegible] handed down to J. P. Morgan, Jr.

And "Junius Spencer Morgan, a student at Harvard," the press dispatches told, "is nominated in the will to take up certain duties in the event of the death of his father, J. P. Morgan II."

YOUNG JUNIUS S. MORGAN, THE MODEST

Photograph taken within the week at Harvard College. He first intended to lick the photographer, then changed his mind and covered his face.

"So Morgan's grandson," people said "is a student at Harvard." What sort of a chap is he? How has it happened that we have never heard of him before?

This chronicle is an attempt to answer these questions.

Junius Spencer Morgan, named for his great-grandfather, is a rich young man quite like other rich young men whose riches are not new to them. He shuns and abhors personal publicity, quite as his grandfather shunned and abhorred it. He inherits his father's dislike for the photographer. Only the other day he shook his fist at the young man who "took" the picture which accompanies this personal mention. "You're not wanted here!" this youngest of the Morgans cried out to the camera man.

The photographer expected a mix-up, when, suddenly Morgan checked himself. He grinned, pulled his hat down over his face and moved away. He may have had visions of the caption for another sort of picture:

"MORGAN'S GRANDSON WHIPS PHOTOGRAPHER."

In Cambridge, they say that young Morgan—he is twenty-one years old—is "nothing out of the ordinary."

He gets along on $2,000 a year.

He has no automobile.

He pays $600 for his rooms in Beck Hall, one of the college dormitories.

He is a member of the Porcellian Club.

Must Improve the Little Red School

Dr. Fairchild Tells Schoolmasters It Is the Weak Point in Educational Scheme.

That the rural schools are undeveloped and poorly administered and sadly in need of improvement, was emphasized yesterday by Dr. Edward T. Fairchild, president of the National Education Association at a luncheon in the rooms of the Massachusetts Schoolmasters' Club.

D. Charles W. Eliot and other notable educators were present. Dr. Fairchild said in part:

"This association would do well to bend its energies toward the improvement of our rural schools, almost to the exclusion of other activities. Improvement must come, and that soon, for we cannot be contented with our national education until it does."

RIFLED HIS POCKETS.

Husband Makes This Charge and Wants Divorce.

TAUNTON, April 26.—Edney A. Lapham today petitioned the Probate Court for a divorce, charging that his wife searched his trousers pockets and extracted money therefrom. Lapham in his petition alleged that when he objected his wife threatened to shoot him.

Mrs. Lapham opposes the petition. May 9 has been set as the date of the hearing.

Bangor Dryest in Forty Years

Sheriff Emerson Active with Raids Pending Removal by Governor Haines—Many Seizures.

BANGOR, Me., April 26.—Pending his removal from office by Governor Haines, Sheriff Emerson of Penobscot County, is actively raiding liquor dealers in Bangor. One raid alone on Lincoln street netted eleven barrels of beer and ale and numerous barrels and cases of whiskey and other liquors.

The "rum room" in the court house basement is filled to capacity with seized goods. The ale and beer will be thrown away.

The liquors, all whiskey, gin and brandy, will be mixed together into one frightful concoction and then barreled and sold for the value of its alcohol. It promises to be the most terrific "mixed drink" ever compounded.

Bangor is dryer than for forty years. One dealer has gone to potato farming. One has removed to Boston. Others are leaving.

Ban Naval Base for "Gold Coast"

Daniels Declines to Furnish Naval Appendage to Newport Society.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—That the chief naval base on the North Atlantic coast will not be established on Narragansett Bay, as recommended by George von L. Meyer, recently secretary of the navy, was today disclosed by a prominent senator as the policy of the Democratic administration. The proposal that the present navy yards at Brooklyn, Boston and Portsmouth be abandoned is rejected with all the emphasis of Secretary Daniels' fighting vocabulary.

The reason is that the new administration considers Narragansett Bay to be equivalent to Newport and synonymous with the millionaire luxury and expensive flirtations—because, in short, it declines to make its navy an appendage of high society along the Rhode Island "gold coast."

PLAGUE SCARE IN MANILA

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Alarmed at the reappearance of the bubonic plague in Manila, five victims of the scourge having died in that city this year, the Manila Board of Health has employed fifty additional ratcatchers to rid the city of disease-spreading rodents, according to reports received today by the United States Public Health Service.

CHARGE FOOD INSPECTOR IS BLIND TO EVIL OF BAD EGGS

Cassidy Denounces Dr. Alexander Burr and Declares Him Unfit for Task of Protecting the Public Health in Boston.

Accuses Health Official of Passing "Red Rot" as All Right When Experts Had Declared It Too Bad for Tanners' Use.

Also Charged with Saying That Liquid Egg Dealers Do Not Violate Law and Will Continue to Sell Staple to Bakers.

DR. ALEXANDER BURR, food inspector of the Boston Board of Health, has indorsed the sale of rotten eggs for food.

He has warned one of the biggest legitimate produce merchants in Boston against attempting to sell good eggs in the fluid state to bakers.

He has declared that the AMERICAN and Harry P. Cassidy were "unjust" in charging the four egg dealers now under indictment for selling rotten eggs, with the sale of rotten eggs to bakers.

These facts became known yesterday, following the attempt of one of the big produce firms of the city to open a legitimate trade in broken eggs for food purposes.

The firm of Goldsmith, Wall & Co. is located on Chatham row. They handle millions of eggs in the year, and have the reputation of food merchants with ideals and self-respect.

J. J. Wall, a member of the firm, wished to establish a trade in broken and liquid eggs. He planned to break high-class fresh eggs, put them in cold storage and sell them to bakers during the year. But he knew that it would be impossible for him to sell these eggs at a profit, if he were forced to compete with firms selling ROTS and SPOTS, while he was selling GOOD EGGS.

Tried to Get Aid from Authorities.

Therefore he undertook an investigation, to find whether the authorities would protect him from this illegal trade in ROTS and SPOTS.

He went to District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier, and found the District Attorney eager to wipe out the trade in rotten eggs in Boston. Then he went to Dr. Francis X. Mahoney of the Boston Board of Health for information as to the attitude of the Boston authorities toward this traffic.

Dr. Mahoney referred him to Dr. Alexander Burr, the chief inspector, and Dr. Burr called on Mr. Wall to discuss the question. Here is Mr. Wall's statement of what follows:

I stated the case to Dr. Burr. I told him I wanted to go into the business of breaking high class fresh eggs for bakers. I said I could not do this, if I were forced to compete with firms selling rots and spots. Their rots and spots cost them less than $1.50 a case, while my eggs would cost me four or five times as much.

Dr. Burr said to me:

"You can't go into this business and sell good eggs and expect to get a higher price than the firms now in the business are getting.

"The eggs they are selling don't break the law, and they will continue to sell them."

He—Dr. Burr—discouraged me in every way from going into a legitimate business in good eggs. I could get no definition of what he considered a good egg, so I took him down to my candling room to test some eggs.

My head egg man—who has been with us for fourteen years, was there, with two expert egg candlers. They picked out an egg, each of them examined it, and then they showed it to Dr. Burr.

THIS EGG WAS A ROT. IT WAS ONE WE HAD PUT IN THE CRATE WITH OTHER ROTS, TO BE THROWN AWAY. THEY WERE NOT EVEN FIT FOR TANNERS TO USE. ALL THE CANDLERS AGREED ON THIS.

DR. BURR BROKE THE EGG. IT WAS A YELLOWISH MASS—THE WHITE AND YOLK RUN TOGETHER. DR. BURR STIRRED IT UP WITH HIS FINGER, SMELLED IT AND I THINK HE TASTED IT. THEN HE SAID IT WAS ALL RIGHT FOR FOOD.

THE EGG WAS ROTTEN. I WOULD NOT UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES SELL IT FOR

DR. BURR SHOULD GO, SAYS CASSIDY

Boston Health Official Unfit for Work If Charges Are True.

FOOD, AND I TOLD DR. BURR SO

It was not even a spot egg, but a ROT. I wouldn't feed it to a pig—and I doubt if a pig would eat it.

DR. BURR'S WHOLE ATTITUDE INDICATED THAT HE WANTED TO PROTECT THE DEALERS NOW SELLING LIQUID EGGS FROM MY COMPETITION.

Dr. Burr is an intimate friend of Professor W. T. Sedgwick of Technology, who says:

A rotten egg is all right for food. If you can get it down and forget it it won't hurt you.

Dr. Burr is also an intimate friend of Alton E. Briggs, executive secretary of the Fruit and Produce Exchange, who fought the bill introduced by Representative John F. McCarthy of Ward 16 to abolish the rotten egg traffic in Boston.

AMERICAN reporters, in order to determine whether Dr. Burr's attitude on the egg question was that of the Boston health department, went to Dr. Francis X. Mahoney, chairman of the Health Board, and asked him. They had a lengthy talk. Dr. Mahoney said at last:

I will get in touch with Dr. Burr, and be ready to give you a statement at 4 o'clock.

At 4 o'clock the reporters called again. Dr. Mahoney [illegible] a typewritten statement [illegible] Dr. P[illegible] was [illegible] with him as [illegible] of Boston made some objection to the statement, and Dr. Mahoney said:

I'll have this corrected, and send it over to you in twenty minutes.

An hour later, a messenger came to the AMERICAN office and said:

Dr. Mahoney would like you to write out just what it is you want to know.

The following [illegible] was written, and sent by messenger to Dr. Mahoney:

To the Boston Board of Health:

Information has come to us that Dr. Alexander Burr, one of your inspectors in [illegible], has declared that spot eggs can legally be sold in Massachusetts, and are all right for food.

Information has also come to us that Dr. Burr has passed as all right for food and as an egg which could legally be sold an egg which four expert candlers agreed was a so-called 'red rot' not fit even for use by tanners.

In order to know whether Dr. Burr represents the ideas of your department we respectfully address to you these questions:

1.—Do you believe that a spot egg can be legally sold in Massachusetts? By the term "spot egg" we mean an egg in which decomposition has begun, and bacteria have developed.

2.—Do you believe there is any firm in Boston today breaking eggs under proper sanitary conditions, and breaking eggs of an average good quality?

3.—Do you believe the present Massachusetts laws on the question of the sale of rotten eggs for food are adequate? If not, what changes do you suggest. Very truly yours,

THE BOSTON AMERICAN.

After an hour and a half's wait, the messenger returned with the following answering letter.

Health Department, 100 Summer street, Boston.
April 25, 1913.

The Boston AMERICAN:

I am directed by the Board of Health to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of even date, containing questions to be answered by this department relative to the sale of eggs in Massachusetts.

The assertion is made that Dr. Alexander Burr of this department has passed "as all right for food, and as an egg which could legally be sold, an egg which four expert candlers agreed was a so-called 'red rot,' not fit even for use by tanners." This assertion is denied emphatically by Dr. Burr, and as there has never been a question as to his integrity and honesty since his connection with this service, the Board of Health is loathe to believe that he made such a statement.

Question numbered one is as follows: "Do you believe a spot egg can be legally sold in Massachusetts? By the term 'spot egg,' we mean an egg in which decomposition has begun, and bacteria have developed."

This department has ruled that a decomposed egg is one that is perceptible to the senses of smell or taste, whether spotted or otherwise.

Question numbered two is as follows: "Do you believe there is any firm in Boston breaking eggs under proper sanitary conditions, and breaking eggs of an average good quality?"

Answer: Yes.

Question numbered three is as follows: "Do you believe that the present Massachusetts laws on the question of the sale of rotten eggs for food are adequate? If not, what changes do you suggest?

In the opinion of the Board of Health the present law prohibits the sale of rotten eggs for food. The board believes, however, that the quality of eggs should be standardized by law. We are of the opinion that all eggs offered for sale to be used for food and found to be rotten should be denatured immediately, wherever and whenever found.

Respectfully yours,
T. L. MALONEY,
Acting Secretary.

H. P. Cassidy on Dr. Burr Charges

Harry P. Cassidy's comment upon the charges against Dr. Alexander Burr, city food inspector.

The charges against Dr. Burr, if true, in my opinion, justify his removal from office.

Dr. Burr says he believes rotten eggs may be legally sold for food.

The State laws specifically forbid the sale of "decomposed" food products. Rotten eggs are "decomposed."

Dr. Burr's attitude is beyond justification. He is not a fit man to be entrusted with the task of protecting the public health.

Acting Mayor for an Hour a Day

Kenny Finds That Enough

HE'S MAYOR NOW

President of the City Council Thomas J. Kenny.

It may prove that John F. Fitzgerald left for the Canal Zone leaving everything ship-shape at City Hall, or it may indicate that the gentlemanly Fitzgerald secretaries—Messrs. Field and Moore—are capable of looking after the property quite as if the boss was on deck, but the fact is that the new Mayor of Boston, the acting Mayor, will give exactly one hour a day to the business of Mayoring, from now until May 22, and let it go at that, confident that all will be well.

The Acting Mayor is the Hon. Thomas J. Kenny, attorney at law and president of the City Council.

Acting Mayor Kenny's friends and followers—in one of his contests he received the votes of 86,000 Bostonians, thereby breaking all records and establishing a new one which will stand for many years—call him a wizard of an executive. They declare he can do as much real work in an hour as most men do in eight.

Mr. Kenny Is a Lawyer.

Mr. Kenny follows that branch of the legal profession known as mercantile law. He has been at it from boyhood. His success, little appreciated by the run of men who follow politics, is known of all lawyers.

And soon after 12 of the clock every day Thomas J. Kenny waives off the clients who are waiting for him and emerges from the office building at No. 87 Milk street, near the Postoffice.

With other lawyers, and brokers, and brokers' clerks, and newspaper editors and such, he hikes to Thompson's Spa in Washington street to sit him on a stool and be waited upon by one of the beauties who have made the Spa AND Boston—famous the country over.

Although Mr. Kenny is a bachelor, and therefore an "eligible," observers report that he appears to have no favorite counter at the Spa. Which is quite remarkable. Quite remarkable!

Having lunched, meagrely and modestly, the Mayor pro tem hurries around to School street to give his hour to the city.

He signs drafts.

He signs bonds.

He signs other important papers.

He sees those—and only those—who have pressing and important business with the Mayor of Boston.

Then he goes back to Milk street and the law offices of Morse, Kenny & Bell.

MODEL YARD FOR B. & M. FREIGHT

In the little village of Mechanicville, N. Y., 189 miles from Boston, the gigantic new east-bound freight yard of the Boston & Maine Railroad is under construction. This yard, costing more than $1,000,000, will be completed early this Fall. Three and one-half miles long, it will embody the most modern and scientific ideas of railroad construction.

The yard is what is known as a "hump yard," the first of its kind to be established on either the Boston & Maine or New Haven system.

To define a hump yard is to describe it. A single track comes in from the main line and rises almost imperceptibly until the top of the hump is reached, from which point there is a heavy down grade. From the track up which the freight train is backed, a fanlike arrangement of tracks radiates through the breadth of the yard. This fan formation starts with the steep grade into the yard from the crest of the hump; and it is from this arrangement of grades and tracks that the yard acquires its name and proves its efficiency.

Big Economy in Time.

In the old days freight was cut out and grouped by a multitude of switching engines. In this modern yard the weight of the load and the grade of the radiating tracks does all the work and a train is split up and made up with the aid of one engine, that one being needed to back the mixed train to the "crest."

On the crest of the rise a man is stationed, and the trainloads are pushed up the gradual slope and stopped by signals on the crest. At present ten men, designated as "riders," are ready to climb onto each car as it is cut off to guide it to the proper track. The man on the "hump" has a list, containing the destination of each car and the track assigned.

On signal the train is started slowly, and when the last car is directly on the crest of the hump it is cut off, and by its own momentum is carried to the proper destination. Track 1 or 10 or 15, as the case may be. The information as to the proper track is given to the rider, who by signal transmits it to the switchman. The train continues backing until all ten of the riders have been sent off, each having in charge from one to five cars.

A switch engine is now in commission to go after the riders and bring them back to the "hump," but a track is being established running directly through the yard, on which is to run a gasoline engine car for this purpose.

Under the working of this yard, much valuable time is saved to the railroad and the shippers, although owing to the greater number of men required it is more expensive to operate than the old system.

4,000-Car Capacity.

The total capacity of the yard, when completed, will be over 4,000 cars—100 train loads of forty cars each.

Also under construction is a brick engine house covering one and one-quarter acres of land and containing twenty-five stalls for locomotives, a power plant for supplying electricity for the yard lights. The care and the comfort of the men are considered essential, and shower baths and recreation rooms are to be located here for them. There are also a sand house, coaling plant, cold storage icing plant for refilling refrigerator cars, stock pens, ash and inspection pits, etc. All of these buildings are to be of reinforced concrete.

It is the intention of the Boston & Maine Railroad to marshal cars and forward them in straight trains without a break direct from Mechanicville to Boston, North Bennington, North Adams (for connection there with the Boston & Albany and New Haven Railroads), Greenfield, Keene, Brattleboro, Bellows Falls, White River Junction, Woodsville, Springfield, Holyoke, Northampton, East Deerfield, Gardner and points north, Worcester, Fitchburg, Wachusett and West Fitchburg, Ayer, Nashua, Salem, Lowell, Lawrence, Deering Junction, Portland, Bangor and points east, besides local cars to be switched and moved in solid trains to avoid rehandling at junction points.

JOHN R. MURPHY MAYORALTY ENTRY

I'll Be a Candidate," He Tells a Friend, "No Matter How Many Others There Are."

A Democrat, prominent in the affairs of the Legislature, told a reporter for the Sunday AMERICAN last night that he had just met the Hon. John R. Murphy, that he had asked the Hon. John how about this report that he is going to be a candidate for Mayor next January, and that Mr. Murphy had smilingly, but earnestly, said this to him:

I hope that none of the gentlemen mentioned as being candidates for the mayoralty are going to run; because I am in such a position that I have got to be a candidate no matter how many other candidates are in the field.

Asked, later, about the correctness of this quotation, Mr. Murphy said he would not discuss the matter in any way, shape or manner. He positively would not talk municipal politics.

Mr. Murphy has not been active in city politics for ten years or more. He has served in the State Senate, is a powerful and gifted orator, and at various times has been wire, fire and water commissioner. In the "good" old days of the convention system he once lost the mayoralty nomination to the late General P. A. Collins. Mr. Murphy is an attorney. John Boyle O'Reilly was his brother-in-law.

Several Democratic politicians in Boston have been told that John R. Murphy will have the signatures of 5,000 fellow citizens and will be on the [illegible] next Winter, a candidate for City Hall.

Mr. Murphy, nevertheless, is not talking.

Dr. J. B. Fenwick of Chelsea Dead

Oldest Physician in City Had Grieved for Five Years for Wife Lost in Great Fire.

Having grieved for five years over the death of his wife, who was burned to death in the Chelsea fire, Dr. Joseph B. Fenwick, seventy-four, died at his home, No. 259 Chestnut street, Chelsea, yesterday morning.

The physician, the oldest in Chelsea, several months ago received a broken hip in a fall. Since the fire the doctor practiced very little.

His wife was lost in the fire with her niece and maid, who, with her, succeeded in escaping from their burning residence on Chestnut street. They had reached Cherry street when their escape was cut off by the falling steeple of the First Congregational Church.

Dr. Fenwick searched for his wife until the three bodies were found three days after the fire in a doorway on Cherry street. He never recovered from the shock.

SUCCESS AWAITS POULTRY RAISERS SATISFIED WITH SMALL BEGINNINGS

Expert Tells How Gradual Growth Pays Best in End—Common Sense Essential.

By MICHAEL K. BOYER,
Poultry Editor of The Farm Journal.

Copyrighted, 1913, by The E[illegible] Company.

Who should undertake poultry work and what inducement is there in the enterprise to warrant an investment? These are questions which come up from time to time, and the man with some spare money is in doubt, probably on account of the failures that have been reported to him, or quite likely from the fact that "the hen is such an insignificant animal that profits cannot be expected."

During the past thirty years the writer has made a careful investigation of the causes of the reported failures and this is what he has found.

A certain class entered into the poultry work on borrowed capital. It was from the start a millstone around the neck. Others had just about enough to make a start, but not a dollar reserved as working capital—hence defeat. There are two essentials, one is capital and the other experience. They go hand in hand. One is as important as the other, but where one or the other is lacking, it would be better to have more experience and less capital than plenty of money and no understanding of the requirements.

Begin in a small way. This is especially important in the case of the man who is limited in experience. Gradually increase the capacity of the plant as both experience and capital will warrant. On such foundations successful poultry farms are built. An excellent illustration is given in the experience of the Curtiss Brothers, of Ransomville, New York. They began at the bottom of the ladder—made the start with a few hens—slowly but surely increased the capacity—and today have the largest poultry plant in New York, and one of the largest in this country. It is a grand example of careful thinking, hard work and good management.

More cases similar to the one above could be cited showing the advisability of small beginnings and careful building. The writer has yet to learn of failures where the business was built up step by step—but oh, how many "gigantic concerns" have fallen where capital was lavishly used from the start and where experience was woefully lacking! No business in any line will stand such follies.

Poultry keeping is not a haven of rest. It is not an occupation that will be successful in the hands of men who never made a success of anything they undertook. It is a business that calls for brains; it calls for good common sense. There is not much hard, manual labor attached to poultry culture, but there is so much sameness, so much repetition, that men without backbone easily become tired.

In foreign countries the peasants keep small flocks, probably not more than one or two hundred, but they give these the best of care. The work is generally performed by the housewife, assisted by the husband when at home from his regular occupation. These peasants will sell their eggs and poultry in the nearest markets, and the income pays the rent, buys clothing for the children, as well as adding to a fund laid aside for a rainy day. A few fowls properly cared for by a widowed woman with scant income will give better returns for the labor spent than could be realized at doing laundering or hiring out as a domestic. The man who has reached the age limit—and in many concerns a man at fifty is considered a back number—can keep the wolf from the door by caring for a limited number of fowls. The schoolboy with a few pens of "chickens" will have an occupation that will broaden his mind, properly exercise his muscles, and keep him in the pink of health, by each day, before and after school hours, taking care of his flocks.

There are health, profit and happiness in the work if it is carefully performed and in a spirit of love.

But the hen will not nor cannot suffer neglect. She will not support the man or woman who merely speculates with her. She will not be able to make eggs without the proper material and the proper care. Investigate a failure and the truth comes out—she has not had proper care.

The market is all right. Eggs and chickens are staple articles. They need no introduction; the public has already been educated up to their use, and, it might be mentioned, the public is acquainted with conditions. It knows a fresh article, and will continue its dealings with those who furnish satisfactory products.

The renter can have both pleasure and profit with a few hens in the back yard. Very many cases are known where on a city lot enough eggs are sold to pay for the feed, and besides, the family is liberally supplied with eggs and poultry for its own use at no cost whatever. Many a delicate wife, daughter or son has received the best of tonic in the care of a few fowls. It is a rest for one to divert his mind from care and worriment to an occupation so full of life.

Getting back to poultry-raising as a business, it should not be entered into as an exclusive affair until the attendant has fully educated himself to the work and has accumulated the proper facilities. Five hundred hens properly cared for will make a fair living; in many cases a very good living. But such a result cannot be gained without the proper knowledge.

The question may arise "What is considered a living?" It cannot alone be measured by figures. Some men can support families and enjoy life on $1.50 a day, others on $2. Many are uncomfortable on $5 a day. A young man reared in luxury would consider $5 as pauperism. In the town of Hammonton, N. J., one man with about 1,000 hens is making a clear profit of $5 a day; another man with 600 hens clears $1,000 a year. Such figures should be tempting enough for men who want to work.

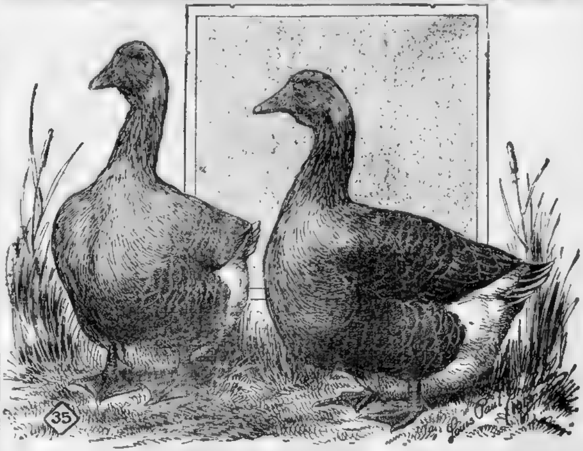
Women seem admirably adapted to this work. A woman, as a rule, is more successful than is a man. She seldom undertakes anything unless she has a love for it. That is the secret. This love calls forth all her energies. She overlooks nothing. Every small detail must be attended to. It is the little leaks that sink them, and they know her voice. Her gentle ways inspire confidence and contentment. Another pointer: Contented and happy hens produce the egg yields.

A woman studies. She does not "know it all"; she is ever ready to learn. On the other hand, at the end of the first year the average man sets himself up as an expert and at the end of three years proclaims himself a veteran. It is about that time that his enterprise becomes shaky; he withdraws from the business, and the community is assured that keeping hens for profit is good in theory but poor in practice.

Beginners start with great enthusiasm. They get down to pencil and paper and startle themselves with the possibilities." They can plainly see an income not equalled by a clerkship, and "there is no drudgery connected with it." They get down to actual work, and the test of their enthusiasm is often of short duration. The continual sameness of the work, the close application required, the constant watching necessary—the work from morning to night—Sundays, as well as weekdays, no holidays off—soon causes a reaction, there is a shirking of duty, the fowls are neglected, the place is not kept in good order, nor made comfortable and the inevitable happens—failure.

The business calls for men of pluck, of grit, of energy, of ambition. There must be a forward move. Men of shiftless habits, who are easily discouraged, had better not undertake the work.

The man who sticks to the business is the man who succeeds. It takes pluck to hold on when everything seems to be going wrong, but the man with grit knows that perseverance is the secret of success, and those who become faint-hearted will never be able to show a dollar of profit.



TOULOUSE GEESE are a famous old variety. The Toulouse is popular in the United States, where it is widely bred. In color the fowls are generally a dark steel gray with the stern, tall and paunch white. The bill and legs are deep orange, and the fowls reach enormous size. The standard weights in America require 16 to 20 pounds for females, 20 to 25 pounds for males.

ANSWERS

D. E. P.—The information you want can be found in "The Poultry Book," a recent publication of Doubleday, Page & Co.

D. McC.—Such a building ought to accommodate 75 pairs of birds. You will get better results if you make two pens and divide the flock. For present use egg cases piled one above another.

O. A. H.—If your fowls have free range twice a day ought to be enough. The use of an automatic feeder will solve your problem and the fowls will do better.

J. J.—We have no catalogue. The one to which you refer is sent out by the advertiser.

A. C.—That is something we cannot tell. Some succeed with one breed and others fail with the same breed. The breed you mention, regardless of color, will give you good results if rightly handled.

Dover—Such cases have been known as a result of highly flavored food, onions for example.

R. M.—They are all Mediterraneans and all lay white eggs. You have chosen well to begin with; now it is up to you to do well with them. What they do depends on what you do.

Jane—If the weight does not exceed eleven pounds you may send them anywhere from 50 to within 150 miles for 46 cents.

THINGS TO REMEMBER

Keep plenty of water before the chicks and have it fresh.

• • •

Don't treat your chicks as you would hothouse plants. Don't fuss over them too much.

• • •

This Spring's failures may be due to the mistakes of last Fall and Winter.

• • •

Like the artist who mixed his colors "with brains," put brains into your business right now, the seed time; then you need have no fear of the harvest.

• • •

Don't do things this Spring just as you did them last Spring. Do them better.

• • •

Regard your chickens as so many dollars and treat them accordingly.

Don't walk through your yards with your eyes closed. To see and to profit by what you see will carry you far on the road to success.

• • •

If you use brooders study the inmates more diligently than the thermometer.

"Healthy hens are hungry hens." Nonsense!

Keep out of draughts. This means you and your fowls.

• • •

The old hen teaches her chickens to eat worms, bugs and grasshoppers. What is the inference?

• • •

The population of the United States is growing at an enormous rate. The demand for poultry products is keeping pace. There are unlimited possibilities for the poultry raiser. The great cry is "reduce the cost of living." Get busy.

BETTER ROXBURY STIRS POLITICIANS

Agitation for Improvements Arouses Many Who Are Now Holding Office.

Stirred to activity by the publicity given to leaders in the agitation for improvements at the "Crossing" district of Roxbury, political lights in Wards 18, 19 and 22 are showing their hands. Citizens of those banner sections of Democracy are also appearing on the firing line.

Political sharps who are now basking in easy places of generous remuneration declare, however, that the improvements agitation has a direct bearing on the Senatorial fight to be waged next September.

Never in the history of the Crossing section has there been such interest for "betterments" and "improvements." The agitation has been extended to the social sphere. Several temperance reform clubs, it is reported, are to be organized in an effort to reduce the number of saloons in the district.

Mass Meetings are Planned.

Complaint is being made that Ward 19 has long been made the dumping ground of incinerating plants, and a mass meeting of the citizens is planned to protest. Ambrose Woods of the Parker Hill district is expected to preside. Mayor Fitzgerald and the City Council will, it is said, be invited to speak.

In Ward 22 there is vigorous opposition to the use of Hyde square as a car terminal by the Elevated. Representative Griffin of the ward is strong for the car barn theory of terminals. Chairman Patrick McManus of the ward Democratic committee, it is said, is to make this the cause of another mass meeting. McManus, it is reported, will argue for a return of the old Saturday night market cars for aged men and women who are unable to climb Elevated stairs.

In Ward 18, where Senator James P. Timilty sits nightly in the Administration Building and talks over matters with precinct scouts and representatives of the highway department unions, tabs are being kept on the movements of one Edward Emmett McGrath, known as the Bourke Cochran of the ward. McGrath is strong for more cars and more streets in the ward, stands strong with Mayor Fitzgerald because of his oratorical ability, and keeps a scrap book on Timilty.

A close watch is also kept on Representative McManus of ward 19. He holds forth at a club on Tremont street, near Weston street, which is in Word 18, a fact that is worrying certain Senatorial aspirants in Wards 19 and 22. McManus became famous in the Senatorial wards for appearing at the first McGrath mass meeting in the Roxbury courthouse and accusing certain office holders as being "thin skinned" when it came to a matter of "plugging for the masses" against the wishes of the corporations.

Refers to His Record.

Representative Timothy F. Ahearn of Ward 19 declares with some fervor that he is not in the "thin-skinned" category denounced by his colleague. He says:

"When the transfer privileges were taken away from the passengers who used to change at Roxbury Crossing, I was secretary of a business men's organization that waited on the Elevated officials to see what could be done to return to the old order of things."

That is Ahearn's reply around the Crossing section, when he is accused of lack of interest in the "inadequate car service on Tremont street."

Ahearn, it is said, expects to pull off one of the judgships in the Roxbury court house if former Representative John J. Mansfield of Ward 17 does not get there ahead of him. Mansfield, it is said, has the inside track.

Ambrose Woods of the Parker Hill district, who says he and former Representative McInerney are uniting their efforts for improvements, notwithstanding the "never-speak-as-we-pass-by policy" when they meet, will back water for no man. Rumor has it they will shortly bury the political hatchet. Supporters of each contend that Congressman Curley is carrying out that idea in a neighboring ward.

McInerney heads the Ward 19 Democratic Club, and this week expects to pull off another "town meeting" in the quarters on Terrace street. He will have something important to say to the boys. Amby Woods, as a CITIZEN of WARD 19, is scheduled to appear and voice his sentiments in favor of more improvements in the district.

The Car Could Wait; Youngster Couldn't.

IT was in Newton and she was running to catch a car. At her heels was a youngster making as good time as he could, and he was crying. By the time she reached the car steps she was a good 100 feet ahead of the little boy, but he kept at it, crying louder and louder. The conductor was holding the car for her.

"Madam," said the conductor as she climbed up the car steps, "who is that little boy?"

"My youngest," she said, perfectly breathless.

"What's he crying for?"

"I didn't have time to kiss him goodbye."

"Well, you get right off this car and kiss him. We can wait better than he can."

The conductor stood with his hand on the signal cord while the operation was performed, and then the car went away, leaving the youngster happy and smiling.

"Chicken Pie Today" Stirs Up the Common.

FLAPPING his arms to right and left, raising them over his head, describing eccentric orbits with his hands, a sailor in the uniform of the U. S. Navy stood on the Common near the kiosk yesterday at about 1 o'clock.

Such unusual conduct was enough to draw the attention of every one. Some stopped to watch him, with amused smiles. The sailor seemed not to notice what a stir he was making. He kept his eyes skyward.

"Crazy as a loon," remarked one pedestrian with a grin.

"Oh! I guess not," answered his companion. "Look up there."

In the window of the recruiting station across Tremont street stood a petty officer watching intently.

"He's wig-wagging," explained a bystander. "I was in the signal corps once myself. What he telegraphed was that the lunch room where he just ate has chicken pie today."

How He Got Rid of "Rush Orders."

"SEVERAL times in the past few weeks we have been called to the phone by some woman who was trying to get a meat market," said a bachelor who keeps house with several other men on St. Botolph street. "Apparently this woman had a way of giving the butcher shop's number so that it sounded like ours. The voice was always the same and the woman invariably had a rush order. It was amusing at first, but it became tiresome. So last week I did something."

"What did you do?"

"I took her order for a dozen chops to be sent around at once and she hasn't given me an order since."

Get Two Lessons For Price of One.

"I HAVE two pupils whose instincts are more commercial than artistic," said a music teacher at the conservatory of music. "They have caused me much amusement by a little trick with which each gets two lessons for the price of one. They are friends and started coming to me together. While I am giving a lesson to one the other listens, and then in turn the second listens to my criticisms of her friend. I believe each is learning faster than she could if she had come alone."

Bird in Window Attracted Crowd.

A little flower store on Boylston street hit on a plan the other day for a window display which drew a crowd that blocked the sidewalk. The plants in the window were arranged to give the effect of a flowerstrewn bit of greensward. That was very pretty, but the thing that drew the crowd was a bird that hopped about picking up seeds and hunting its dinner among the plants without the slightest trace of the self-consciousness of the "demonstrator."

Used His Tobacco To Balk the Moths.

"NEVER lay in a supply of your favorite tobacco in the Spring," said a confirmed smoker, whose name is in [redacted]

"Why not," asked his friend, "doesn't it keep well?"

"Not that. You may do as you please if you're not married. But last week I stocked up with my favorite brand—the one that's almost too costly, you know. Well, yesterday I went to fill my pouch, but never a bit of tobacco could I find. My wife heard me hunting and explained. It seems she had been putting away things for the summer and being out of moth balls had used my tobacco as a substitute. That's why I have added a new one to my list of dont's."

They Wanted 'em Green and They Got It.

THEY were watching a workman remove the dirty green paint from the train indicators at the North Station and were surprised to find that the cabinets were made of quarter sawed oak. They wondered why the beautiful grain of the wood should have ever been covered with paint. Said one.

"It reminds me of something that happened in a little city north of Boston several years ago. A wealthy citizen gave the city a pair of bronze lamp posts for the sidewalk in front of the City Hall. In course of time the posts took on the green tint so much desired in bronzes, but their mottled appearance so grated on the Mayor of that day that he ordered the janitor to scour them. He was told that he must not do that as the color was greatly admired by artistic folk.

"Well, then, I'll have 'em painted green," said the Mayor. And he did.

J. S. MORGAN, OF HARVARD, MODEST

Most Discussed Man at University Is Heir of Financier.

—sometimes called the "Pork"—the last word in the exclusiveness of Harvard selectness. Only twenty undergraduates, ten from the Senior and ten from the Junior class, can belong to the Porcellian.

He is not at all a snob, and yet he is not a "mixer." His rule is, apparently, that he knows nobody at Harvard whom he did not know before he came. This does not mean that he is either lonesome or lonely, for his mother was one of the Beacon street Grews and the younger Morgan has several Harvard acquaintances among the Boston men.

He likes the theatre, he loves the river and he "goes in" for tennis.

Like his grandfather, finally, Junius Spencer Morgan, who some day may be called upon to rule the greatest of American banking houses, is more or less a silent person. Some call him "Silent" Morgan.

Most of these things were related of the young man by other Harvard young men who do not pretend to intimacy with him. He fills no particular place in the little world of his college. He leads no "crowd." He has "made" the best of college societies. For the rest he apears to be rather a "lazy" young man!

Shy in Mathematics.

Morgan is so lazy, in fact—and perhaps it is well that "Grandpa" did not know of this—that he has yet to pass off an entrance condition. This is why, in his junior year, he is still rated a member of the sophomore class.

Morgan came to college shy—of all things!—in mathematics.

One of these days, therefore, he will be called to the college "office" and told to "get busy."

It will not avail him then that his father is one of the Fellows of the Corporation. Instead—if he follows the course of other rich young men who have been prodded by the "office"—he will call upon the "Widow Nolan," a professional tutor and a Harvard institution, and, guided by the "widow" or one of his several first-aids-to-the-indolent, will be put through a course of sprouts at the flat rate of five dollars an hour. He will leave the "Widow"—who isn't a widow at all, of course—fit to take any hurdle that Harvard mathematicians want to place before him.

Being of the Grew family of Beacon street, young Mr. Morgan occasionally journeys into Boston. His uncle is Henry S. Grew of Marlboro street in the Back Bay, president of the National Union Bank. The family is related to the Wigglesworths, another Boston family as old as the Puritan capital.

Mostly, these Boston visits are for the purpose of occupying a front row seat in one of the theatres, but Morgan Junior is unknown to Back Bay ball rooms.

Has No Valet.

He is tall and big, this young student who may yet be one of the financial powers of the Republic, with certain suggestions that physically he is inclined to the Morgan heaviness. Another note of the Morgan is his large nose.

There is no Morgan valet in Cambridge. The young man of many millions—in the prospective—is believed to be the possessor of not more than three or four suits of clothing. His accustomed attire may best be described by the well-worn phrase "neat but not gaudy." The cloth is usually dark. He shuns jewelry, except a watch chain, avoiding even a scarfpin, he wears a black tie and he affects a felt hat.

If it were not for his social successes he would pass unnoticed in the great crowd of Harvard men. But, one after another, he has "made" those Harvard clubs which the socially elect call worth while.

At the end of his freshman year, for instance, he had made the famous "Institute of 1770."

Election to the Institute marks the first upward step in a social career at Harvard.

Men do not seek the Institute, oldest of the social organizations at Harvard, they are "chosen." Ten at a time they are picked, from the freshman and the sophomore classes, until the limit of one hundred is reached.

So, Morgan was picked, and so later he was picked for the Porcellian.

The Porcellian twenty come ten each from the junior and the senior classes. Theodore Roosevelt was a Porcellian. So was Henry Cabot Lodge. So were J. P. Morgan, Jr., and August Belmont. The members are not only men of wealth, but men of families socially eminent. Some of the associates of young Morgan in the present club are E. D. Morgan, Jr., of New York; Percy Wendell, the athlete; "Ted" Frothingham of the eleven; Morgan Belmont, Leverett Saltonstall and Charles P. Curtis, Jr., of a well known Boston family.

Hit Social Bullseye.

The home of the Porcellian Club is built on college land in Massachusetts avenue. Here is the headquarters of this youngest of the Morgans. Here, every morning, he may be found at breakfast.

The club house is richly furnished. The surroundings are luxurious. A colored servitor in livery guards the portal. Other colored men are waiters and attendants.

Over the entrance—or either side are a famous book-store and a furnishing goods shop—is carved in stone the club coat of arms, the head of a wild pig. Hence, "The Pork."

On his society way from the Institute entrance to the Porcellian goal, Morgan became a member of the Signet Club, founded in '70, and the Phoenix Club, now in its eleventh year. These are good clubs, but when Junius Spencer Morgan "made" the Porcellian—became one among twenty among 4,194—he had hit the social bullseye of college life and had rung the bell.

When Morgan first came to Harvard his rooms were on the somewhat famous and occasionally notorious "Gold Coast," so called, because here, at one time, lived most of the students with "more money than brains." Comparatively speaking, their number was never large.

Morgan did not stay long on the "Gold Coast." Beck Hall, his present abode, is the oldest of the college dormitories outside the "Yard."

It is situated in Quincy street, across the way from Harvard Union. Here live the "conservative rich." Young Morgan's $600 suite consists of three rooms, a study, a bedroom and a bath. It is modestly furnished. It is the same room occupied by his father. On the walls are prints of famous paintings. Some from originals owned by his famous grandfather.

Trust Gets Contract to Oil City Streets

Contract Awarded by Commissioner of Public Works After Competitive Biding.

The Oil Trust has won out in the competitive bidding for road oil to water Boston streets, and Commissioner of Public Works Rourke has awarded them the contract for 200,000 gallons of emulsion oil and 200,000 gallons of emulsified road oil.

The price which the city will pay the Standard Oil Company is 6¼ cents per gallon for emulsion oil and the same price for the emulsified oil.

The Standard Oil was the only bidder for both grades of oil, and was 3¾ cents per gallon lower than the Headley Good Roads Company.

I. W. W. REQUESTS COMMON PERMIT

The I. W. W. have applied for a permit for Boston Common on the afternoon of Sunday, May 4. Colonel "Dick" Field, in the absence of the Mayor, declined to issue the permit and referred the matter to acting-Mayor Kenny. The application was made in the name of the Little Falls Defence League, which styles itself an organization for the purpose of raising funds to carry on a strike at Little Falls.

New England Clergy Pray Today for China

Ministers at Noon Will Devote Ten Minutes to New Government in Far East.

Every minister in New England has been asked to pray fifteen minutes at noon today for the success of the Chinese government.

This request has come from the Chinese Republic. Bishop Bashford of the Methodist Episcopal Church in China in a cablegram to the missionary offices of that church in this city confirms the request of the Chinese government and hopes that every minister and congregation in New England will spend at least ten minutes in praying for the success of the Chinese government.

Monahan of Malden, by administering poisoned whiskey.

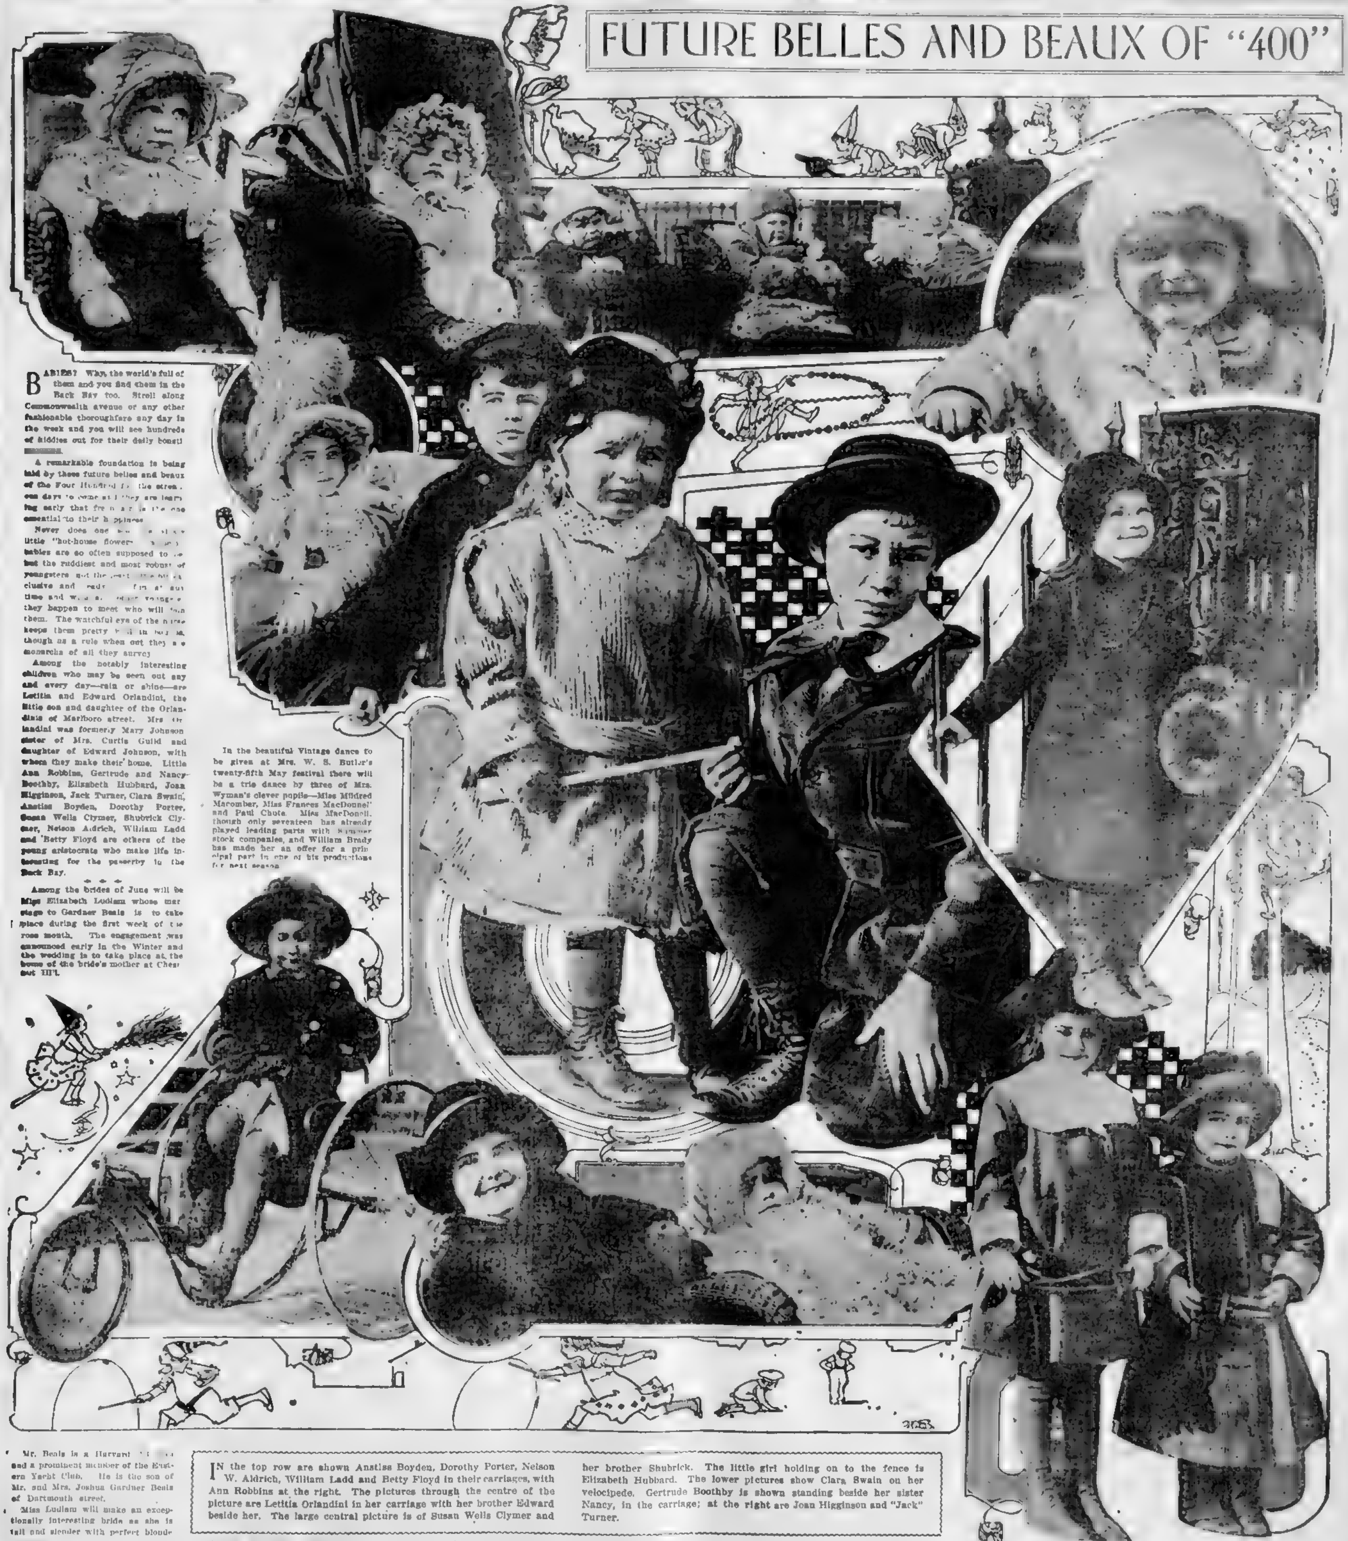
FUTURE BELLES AND BEAUX OF "400"



BABIES? Why, the world's full of them and you find them in the Back Bay too. Stroll along Commonwealth avenue or any other fashionable thoroughfare any day in the week and you will see hundreds of kiddies out for their daily constitutional.

A remarkable foundation is being laid by these future belles and beaux of the Four Hundred for the strenuous days to come and they are learning early that fresh air is the one essential to their happiness.

Never does one [illegible] little "hot-house flowers" [illegible] babies are so often supposed to be, but the ruddiest and most robust of youngsters [illegible] elusive and ready [illegible] time and [illegible] youngsters they happen to meet who will [illegible] them. The watchful eye of the nurse keeps them pretty [illegible] though as a rule when out they are monarchs of all they survey.

Among the notably interesting children who may be seen out any and every day—rain or shine—are Letitia and Edward Orlandini, the little son and daughter of the Orlandinis of Marlboro street. Mrs. Orlandini was formerly Mary Johnson sister of Mrs. Curtis Guild and daughter of Edward Johnson, with whom they make their home. Little Ann Robbins, Gertrude and Nancy Boothby, Elizabeth Hubbard, Joan Higginson, Jack Turner, Clara Swain, Anstiss Boyden, Dorothy Porter, Susan Wells Clymer, Shubrick Clymer, Nelson Aldrich, William Ladd and Betty Floyd are others of the young aristocrats who make life interesting for the passerby in the Back Bay.

Among the brides of June will be Miss Elizabeth Ludlam whose marriage to Gardner Beals is to take place during the first week of the rose month. The engagement was announced early in the Winter and the wedding is to take place at the home of the bride's mother at Chestnut Hill.

Mr. Beals is a Harvard [illegible] and a prominent member of the Eastern Yacht Club. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Gardner Beals of Dartmouth street.

Miss Ludlam will make an exceptionally interesting bride as she is tall and slender with perfect blonde [illegible]

Saturday, May 31, is the date set for the [illegible] of Miss Christine Hunnewell and Nelson S. Bartlett, Jr.

Miss Hunnewell who is one of the most [illegible] of her [illegible] of her [illegible] the Vincent Club rehearsals, is the daughter of the Henry S. Hunnewells and a girl of rare personality.

In the beautiful Vintage dance to be given at Mrs. W. S. Butler's twenty-fifth May festival there will be a trio dance by three of Mrs. Wyman's clever pupils—Miss Mildred Macomber, Miss Frances MacDonnell and Paul Chute. Miss MacDonell, though only seventeen has already played leading parts with Summer stock companies, and William Brady has made her an offer for a principal part in one of his productions for next season.

IN the top row are shown Anstiss Boyden, Dorothy Porter, Nelson W. Aldrich, William Ladd and Betty Floyd in their carriages, with Ann Robbins at the right. The pictures through the centre of the picture are Letitia Orlandini in her carriage with her brother Edward beside her. The large central picture is of Susan Wells Clymer and her brother Shubrick. The little girl holding on to the fence is Elizabeth Hubbard. The lower pictures show Clara Swain on her velocipede. Gertrude Boothby is shown standing beside her sister Nancy, in the carriage; at the right are Joan Higginson and "Jack" Turner.

Another interesting wedding of the early summer will be that of Miss Nora Iasigi and William Marshall Bullitt of Washington, former solicitor general. Miss Iasigi, who belongs to the set of girls who were debutantes some several seasons ago, has spent the greater part of her time of late at her country place in the Berkshires, though each winter she spends some time in town, at the height of the season. "Clovercroft," the Iasigi home in the Berkshires, is one of the finest of the many handsome ones of that section and is quite the most hospitable.

Miss Iasigi and her mother have traveled much abroad and were recently presented at Buckingham Palace. Miss Iasigi is a member of the Vincent Club, as well as the Chilton. Mrs. Arthur Grannis is her older sister. Miss Iasigi is much interested in various philanthropies and has devoted much of her time to helping those less fortunate than herself. She is a friend of the Misses Meyer and spent some time as their guest in Washington last Winter.

Mr. Bullitt is a member of the Metropolitan Club in Washington, the Metropolitan in New York, and the Sons of the American Revolution. He graduated from Princeton in '94. He is one of the most popular and best known bachelors identified with the last administration. He gave one of the largest and most brilliant dinners of the season early in February at the Shoreham, when Miss Iasigi was prominent among the guests.

It is said that the wedding is to take place in Stockbridge on May 31.

Mrs. John C. Phillips, who is enjoying motoring the past week almost daily, is looking especially well this Spring, and like many of the fashionables, finds satin a popular dress material in Spring costumes. One of her prettiest creations is of black satin charmeuse, [illegible] of which is in the long lines of the cutaway effect and [illegible] black satin buttons both at the back and on the front fastening [illegible] a wide rolling col[illegible] wears with this a beautiful [illegible] feathered hat of black satin.

Social Events in and About Town

Vincent Club Play Kept Smart Set on the Move

Among the leading events of the week just over were the Vincent Club theatricals, which kept the younger smart set busy in the giving and the older members busy attending, for few were content with seeing the performance only once.

Rollicking Dutch and Polish dances, drills, all sorts of fairy dances, good singing and exceptional acting were some of the features of this, quite the most amusing play they have given—"A Corner in Cheese."

The three acts were written by Miss Frances Q. Nichols, with chorus and lyrics by Miss Frances Nichols and Miss Frances Porter.

The music was adapted by Mrs. Thomas B. Gannett, Jr., Miss Eleanor Cotton and Miss Katherine Dorr, all members of the club.

"The Harlem Cheese Girls" made a decided hit in their bright skirts, wooden shoes and quaint bonnets, with their singing and dancing. All the parts were played by members of the club, who covered themselves with glory at every performance.

The play opens in the village square in Zuyderdam. William Wendery, a young American, just out of college, is sent abroad by his uncle, a "copper king" with a tutor and a sealed envelope to open when he reaches the other side. But on opening the envelope what is his dismay to find that it contains nothing but good advice and the information that he is now on his own resources.

He sees a barrow full of cheese and decides to make his fortune and have his revenge at one and the same time. He recalls that his uncle is extremely fond of Dutch cheese, and he determines to get a corner in that commodity and stop its exportation and in this way bring his uncle to terms. So with the innkeeper and burgomaster he forms a syndicate. His plans have reached the ears of Tilly, the lady of the Wind Mill, who takes a decided fancy to him but determines to frustrate his plans so she refuses to sell to him.

He falls desperately in love with the young lady and declares that he will attack the mill and carry off all her cheeses and her with them.

According to tradition the first man fortunate enough to behold the dance of the tulips of the enchanted garden will be the future husband of the Lady of the Mill. The hero enters and is found by a gnome asleep in the garden.

Bats, fireflies, the will o' the wisp and tulips take part in the nocturnal gayety and join in a mad revel, and William realizes that to him is given the chance to fulfill the tradition.

In the cast were:

Spring Bride Now Rules

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

YES, she's the same bit of interesting femininity—just as full of buoyant hope and happiness, life and love—as she has been in all the other Spring times that have gone before.

Who? Why, the Spring bride, of course. She is one of the things under the sun blessed with perennial newness.

She is this year wearing white satin gowns trimmed with lace—just as if most the brides down the long ages hadn't done the same thing, but each of her innumerable friends is as anxious to see that gown as though it were to be a dazzling sensation.

Just now "trousseau hysteria" is an affliction which is threatening several of our prospective brides, and doctors are wisely prescribing a "week's retreat" before the wedding day instead of the usual round of excitement that leads up to a harassed honeymoon.

"Trousseau hysteria" is but another name for the whirl of excitement surrounding the bride in regard to clothes, fittings, pre-nuptial entertainments, etc., which crowd her days for weeks before the wedding day.

But it's only the few, the very few, who are willing to follow the advice of physicians, for what is a wedding without all its incident gayeties, they argue, and so insist upon standing their grounds and seeing things through.

And so—as gently as the blossoms of Spring unfold, they are grouping themselves on the stage in the great pageant. The time is theirs by divine right and in the swirl of white glory that the advancing procession makes, we begin to single them out. There is the timid hesitant bride, who, like the blossoms themselves, blushes without a crime. We all love her, and to this class belongs pretty Marie Lee.

Then there is the regal Junoesque bride, commanding our highest admiration, and of this class charming Christine Hunnewell is a striking example, as is also Rosamond Dixey.

There is also the wonderously winsome "thistle-down" bit of a bride. She fascinates us quite completely. The open air bride—she who has been the athletic girl, winning honors galore for herself on the tennis courts, the golf links and at the horse shows—as wholesome as a snow apple and with a breezy personality fragrantly suggestive of a Spring and of apple blossoms themselves. Yes, they are all lovely, as discerning bridegrooms discovered some time ago.

And now anent the weddings—who is it that are throwing up their hands in horror at the waste and extravagance of fashionable Boston weddings?

Do the fashionable weddings represent waste alone? In Boston the sick and poor of the city receive thousands of bouquets from the city's fashionable social functions, the delicate orchids, violets and various other blooms carrying their sweet messages to the dingy tenement sick-rooms and the hospital wards.

In Boston the brides as well as the debutantes always send the great array of flowers showered upon them by admiring friends or used in the decorations, to the hospital.

Most of them have their pet charities and the day of the wedding or the morning after the coming-out party, the plants and the cut flowers are bundled into a wagon or the family automobile and sent on to the sick children of mothers in some far corner of the city.

Thus the flowers have traveled a four-cornered route of pleasure-giving. The florist has profited financially, the giver has found pleasure in sending them, the bride or debutante in receiving and the grand climax comes in the joy which they carry to the sick and poor. So let us mourn no more this seeming extravagance.

But the gay group comes on quite as gaily and unconcernedly as if they were the sole inhabitants of the earth and gossip of their extravagances disturbs them not in the least.

Outdoor Sports

at Lakewood, N. J.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 26.—Society has interested itself in all the out-of door sports during the beautiful Spring weather which Lakewood has been enjoying.

Polo is the all important recreation, and every match day the side lines are crowded with carriages and motor cars. The Waterbury brothers, Milburn and Whitney draw rounds of applause by their brilliant play and seemingly reckless riding, although Agassiz, Stoddard Harrison and the others match their spectacular play.

The dinner dance at the Country Club given by R. L. Agassiz was probably the most brilliant function of the season. Over forty guests were present at the dinner and the table was wonderfully decorated with American beauty roses and other flowers. Turkey trotting continued until midnight when a seated supper was served. Among the guests at the dinner were Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Willock, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Potts, Mr. and Mrs. William Thaw, 3d, Mrs. F. O. Rowland, Mrs. Gruner, Miss Emily Randolph, and Messrs. L. E. Stoddard, Devereux Milburn, Malcolm Stevenson, J. B. Eustis, P. S. P. Randolph, Jr., C. C. Rumsey, Rene La Montagne and Bennet. Arriving afterwards for the dancing were Mrs. George J. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel, Jr., Miss Beatrice Claflin, H. L. Hazard and Leonard Hunt.

Mrs. William B. Leeds has opened her cottage, the Peaks, for the Spring season and is entertaining a large house party including Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Leeds and Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Kimball.

Tonight the governors of the Country Club give their polo ball in honor of the visiting players practicing here for the international series.

Active Spring Days at Virginia Hot Springs

VIRGINIA HOT SPRINGS, April 26.—The Spring season at the Homestead, Virginia Hot Springs, is quite the liveliest on record and the arrival of many notable people from Boston and vicinity has done much to add to the gaiety of the resort.

There was rejoicing when Kitty Fay blew in from Wellesley Hills, and she is always the centre of a crowd. She took coffee after dinner in the Japanese room with the Hollis Hunnewells and Mrs. Frederick Neilson, Ned Fritz and Marriott Welch, and afterward played auction off in a corner with the Herbert Fosters of Dedham, who are here for the Spring season. Mrs. Foster was wearing an odd but attractive dinner gown of pale blue satin with old rose sleeves and much old rose chiffon drapery about it, while Miss Fay was dressed in a Watteau-Dresden effect in flowered pale blue silk with bouffant panniers and many straps of pale blue satin ribbons flying to the wind. She was with Mrs. Harry Hall at tea on the lawn Friday, wearing a white serge suit and wide black satin sash wound loosely about her waist and tied on the side. With this she wore a white chip hat wreathed with pink, blue and violet hortensias and a waving black aigrette at the side. Another gown she has worn of late is of pink taffeta with a very bobbly skirt and some of the bouffant draperies and pannier effects that characterize so many Spring models.

Mrs. Hall has been wearing some of the loveliest dinner gowns imaginable, all long flowing chiffons with severe lines, but graceful because of their shimmering softness, and one was of all the coloring of a big hortensia with shading pinks and purples and blues. Mrs. Frank S. Chick, too, has some beautiful dinner gowns, and with her silver hair and pink and white skin, she is one of the few elderly women I have seen who have a really beautiful neck and shoulders and can afford to show them from a decollete gown.

Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell has one gown of apricot brocade that sets off her brunette beauty to perfection and has also a handsome taupe cloth tailored suit.

Miss Katherine Fay of Wellesley Hills, ("The Hundreds") arrived at the Homestead on her annual Spring visit, and as usual, took her place as leader of the younger set.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Hall of No. 472 Beacon street are at Hot Springs, where they usually come in Spring and Autumn to spend a few weeks, and Mrs. Hall is one of the most popular women at the resort. She was one of a quartet having tea on the lawn in front of the golf club on Friday, the others being Miss Kittie Fay, Mrs. Robert E. Waller of New York and Mrs. Clendenning Ryan. Mrs. Hall is devoted to horseback riding and spends an hour in the saddle daily. Miss Kittie Fay rides and brings her own saddle, as she rides a right-handed saddle, the only one ever seen at Virginia Hot Springs.

Thomas N. Perkins of Boston and Westwood is one of the riders at the Homestead and rode over to Fassifern Farm on Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. J. Converse Gray has joined friends at the Hot Springs for an April visit and Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Chick are still here.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Gannett, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Warren of Boston are enjoying a fortnight here, and Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Bond have come from Brookline for a short stay.

Mrs. Wallace L. Pierce and Miss Barbara Pierce of Milton, accompanied by Mrs. J. L. Richardson of Cranford, N. J., are at the Homestead for a Spring visit.

NOBODY CAN TELL IF YOU DARKEN GRAY, FADED HAIR WITH SAGE TEA

Druggist Says When Mixed with Sulphur Prevents Dandruff and Falling Hair.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, then left to age and carefully filtered, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching, and falling hair.

Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss. Some druggists make their own, but it isn't nearly so nice as "Wyeth's."

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Do this tonight and by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, after another application or two it will be restored to its natural color and be even more glossy, soft and luxuriant than ever.

Local druggists say that they are selling lots of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur"; it surely helps folks appear years younger.

A REAL, live fairy play with real fun loving fairies and magic galore is to be given just for the kiddies under the auspices of a long list of society patronesses.

"The Magic Rose" is the name of the play written by Susan Thayer Bowker and it is to be given at the Plymouth Theatre Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 by a cast including many well known society people.

This is really [illegible] movement to [illegible] Boston plays for children. The play was to have been produced [illegible] tre, but so important is the [illegible] considered that it was [illegible] have it staged in a larger theatre in order that more people [illegible] welfare of [illegible] modated.

An Educational Play.

The sole object of these little plays is that the children early [illegible] become conversant with good drama, music and artistic dancing, and the youngsters all over town, in the Back Bay, the South End, and all are wild with excitement over the fact that [illegible] going to the theatre [illegible] to see a play written for them and sit there like regular grown-ups while they watch real fairies do stunts for their amusement.

Many theatre parties are to be given and more than one well known matron philanthropically inclined, has made up a merry little party from the poorer districts, and more [illegible] girl who has been teaching in the settlements has arranged to take her eager little brood to see "The Magic Rose."

Miss Bowker, the author of this and other plays which are to be produced for the [illegible], is a member of the [illegible] Boston [illegible] family [illegible] a Rad[illegible] and was formerly a student of the dramatic course conducted by Professor Baker. Her other works include "New England [illegible]," "[illegible] Lucky Day," "[illegible]," "An Anglo-American Affair," "Martha Washington's Dream" and a new piece, now in rehearsal and to be produced next month in New York entitled "Love's Messenger."

Seen Through Gauze Curtain.

Just imagine the wide-eyed [illegible] month-old wonder with which the theatre full of [illegible] tiny toddlers will gaze upon a real live and most exciting play!

The play is viewed from a gauze curtain. The scene opens in a leafy though bloomless garden, this spell having been cast by the Sprite who represents Evil and sounds the keynote of the play [illegible] love [illegible] the flowers. He makes this statement to the Sportsman, declaring that [illegible] able to keep the Queen free [illegible] he is [illegible] the ruler of the garden.

As the Sprite [illegible] the Sportsman:

[illegible]
[illegible]
I am [illegible] and gray,
[illegible] day
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] free,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
They answer all my demands.

Some of the Actors.

Angered at the words of the Sprite, the Sportsman seeks to enter the [illegible] of the Queen, but is repelled by [illegible] who [illegible] to his evil [illegible]. By the [illegible] of the sprites the Sportsman is suddenly deprived of his sight. He later regains it, however, when he no longer ventures to enter the [illegible] of the Queen. Upon the appearance of the Prince who is possessed of the Magic Rose, comes the transformation, and joy reigns supreme when the Prince falls in love with the Queen.

Miss Bowker has [illegible] in writing [illegible] play that will easily amuse the children, as well as adequately convey the message of love. The spells cast by the sprites during the action of the play represent the evil thoughts of the people while the Rose represents the light of [illegible] that can dispel all evil thoughts. It also signifies that Love is the compelling influence in the world.

The Sprites Are Active.

Besides the characters already mentioned the others include The Butterfly, The Dog, The Cat, The Pumpkin, The Squirrel, The Firefly and The Parrot. Among the leading members are Grace Von Brocklin, a well known Brookline girl who will be seen as the Prince. Miss Von Brocklin is at present completing her course of studies at the Boston Opera House under the guidance of Ramon Blanchart, and expects to make her operatic debut in this city with the Boston Opera Company next Fall. Anna Spencer Frost, who will essay the important part of the Sportsman, is a reader of considerable prominence. Loraine Roberts, who plays the Rose Queen, is an accomplished dancer. Her series of fairy [illegible] has been the feature of many of the prominent amateur productions. Frances McDonnell is best known by her prominence in the May festivals. Clayton Robinson as The Parrot has also been identified for a long time with Mrs. Butler's annual party. The others are Alice Barnard Dias as The Pumpkin, Bessie Buckley as The Butterfly, Harriett McDaniel as The Squirrel, Edwin McDonnell as The Cat.

The Sprite will be played by Onita, who is the original Palmer-Cox brownie.

The play will be staged under the general supervision of Mr. James Gilbert, assisted by Miss Barteaux. The musical settings have been arranged by Clayton Thomas.

The patronesses include: Mrs. [illegible] N. Foss, Mrs. H. Noble Foss, Mrs. [illegible] Allen, Mrs. W[illegible] Putnam Lowell, Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Mrs. William Tudor, Mrs. Samuel J. Mixter, Mrs. Roland Gray, Mrs. Melvin O. Adams, Mrs. H. Staples Potter, Mrs. John [illegible] Ames, Mrs. Edwin [illegible], [illegible], Mrs. George R. Fearing, Jr., Mrs. Roland Norcross Cutter and Mrs. William Starling Burgess.

Goings and Comings of Society Set.

Miss Rosamond Dixey of Beacon street, [illegible] to be among the Summer brides at Lenox, where her wedding to Loring Brooks is to take place, is one of the few striking brunettes who look admirable in deep purple, a color which, as a rule, is extremely trying to that type. One of her most becoming Spring toilettes is of a deep purple cloth, the long coat of [illegible] has [illegible] of white lace which forms the [illegible] graduated revers at [illegible] of exquisite Irish lace, which she brought with her from her last trip to Europe. The skirt is a close-fitting one, absolutely plain and edged with a [illegible] band of the same material, and with it at a reception Tuesday she wore a stunning set of [illegible] fur. Her hat was a [illegible] close-fitting one of [illegible] deep purple shade [illegible] and at the [illegible] was trimmed with three or four flat white [illegible] shaded into the purple [illegible] which so [illegible] accentuated her dark coloring [illegible] went to make up a most brilliant ensemble.

Mrs. Wallace Goodrich of Beacon street, who, with Mr. Goodrich, has already been spending a good deal of time at The Chubbs, the beautiful Summer estate of her father, T. Dennie Boardman at Manchester-by-the-Sea, is wearing a stunning creation this Spring in dark blue cloth figured in a silk vine pattern, with which she wears an [illegible] purple straw hat trimmed scarcely at all, with the exception of the tall black numidi feather at the front, which is so popular on the smartest hats this Spring.

Miss Elizabeth Lee, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Lee of Boylston street, Brookline, who is to figure among the June brides in her wedding with young Harry Pratt McKean of this city and Philadelphia, will be among the most attractive brides of the Summer and will occupy a prominent place among the smartest of the younger matrons, as the young people are to be among the Summer colony at Wenham, where McKean has just purchased an estate. A part of their Summer will in all probability be spent with Mrs. H. P. McKean at her attractive camp, "[illegible]," Lake Sunapee in New Hampshire. [illegible], like her sons, is devoted to the [illegible] life since purchasing the estate [illegible] season. Young Shaw McKean will [illegible] for his brother, while the [illegible] to be largely drawn from [illegible] at Harvard.

Mrs. Henry Ware [illegible] of Marlboro street has taken a cottage [illegible] Newport for the season. Mrs. [illegible] spent last Summer at Newport.

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Hoyt, who are at present [illegible] at Staatsburg, N. Y., [illegible] Beverly home early in June, where they will spend the Summer.

Mrs. Harold W[illegible] of Brookline is at present in Washington, where she is the guest of her parents, Colonel and Mrs. Robert Craig.

Among the earliest arrivals for the season on the North Shore is Mrs. [illegible] Prince, who is at her West Manchester estate and has closed her town house in Beacon street.

Among the Pioneer arrivals at Bar Harbor for the season will be Mr. and Mrs. Otis Norcross of Marlboro street, who have been in New York the past week. They will go to Bar Harbor in May.

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. [illegible] S. [illegible] of Boston are shortly [illegible] for Europe where they will spend three months.

HAPPY, LAUGHING CHILD SHORTLY

If Cross, Feverish, Bilious and Sick, Let "Syrup of Figs" Clean Its Little Waste-Clogged Bowels.

No matter what ails your child, a gentle, thorough laxative physic should always be the first treatment given.

If your child isn't feeling well; resting nicely; eating regularly and acting naturally, it is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and 30 feet of bowels are filled with foul, constipated waste matter and need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or your little one has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, tongue coated give a teaspoonful of Syrup of Figs and in a few hours all the clogged up waste, undigested food and sour bile will gently move on and out of its little bowels without nausea, griping or weakness, and you will surely have a well, happy and smiling child again shortly.

With Syrup of Figs you are not drugging your children, being composed entirely of luscious figs, senna and aromatics it cannot be harmful, besides they dearly love its delicious fig taste.

Mothers should always keep Syrup of Figs handy. It is the only stomach, liver and bowel cleanser and regulator needed—a little given today will save a sick child tomorrow.

Full directions for children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the package.

Ask your druggist for the full name, "Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna," prepared by the California Fig Syrup Co. This is the delicious tasting, genuine old reliable. Refuse anything else offered.

Proof of Value of the time-tested, world-tried, home remedy—proof of its power to relieve quickly, safely, surely, the headaches, the sour taste, the poor spirits and the fatigue of biliousness—will be found in every dose of

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Sold everywhere. In boxes, 10c., 25c.

'CASCARETS' MAKE YOU FEEL GREAT

A Ten-Cent Box Will Keep Your Liver, Stomach and Bowels Clean for Months.

Sick headaches, [illegible] dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver, delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system, is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Salts, cathartic pills, oil and purgative waters force a passageway for a day or two—yes—but they don't take the poisons out and have no effect upon the liver or stomach.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels clean and regular for months.

Valeska Suratt's Beauty Secrets. Removing Superfluous Hair

Miss Valeska Suratt

Secrets Few People Know. Valeska Suratt, the Famous Self-Made Beauty Actress, Reveals Some of Her Treasured Experiences.

By Miss Valeska Suratt

REMOVING superfluous hair is a problem to many women. On the stage the continued use of a hair remover is necessary. Therefore it should be quickly efficacious and absolutely harmless to the skin. The formula I have perfected I believe solves the problem as nothing else has ever done. That is why it has become so tremendously popular. This formula never irritates, reddens or spots the skin. It dissolves the hair as by magic. Try it and you will be convinced. Hundreds of women could beautify themselves to a remarkable degree if they would remove not only the heavy hairs that appear on the face, but the soft down that is so frequently seen on the arms and face. This down is seen more often on those whose complexion is very light or very dark.

Get one ounce of simple sulpho solution. This you can get at the drug store for one dollar. Apply it with the finger-tips to the superfluous hair, keeping the hair moist with it for two or three minutes until it has been dissolved. Then wipe it off with a damp cloth and wash the skin.

TAUNTED—You can stop your hair falling in a few days' time. My modesty will not prevent me from saying that I am known as the only woman on the American stage who wears no switches, puffs or other hair makeshifts. All the hair I have is my own. I grew it all through my own efforts. Here is the formula which is doing the same for hundreds of my readers and friends as for me.

Mix half a pint of alcohol with half a pint of water. To this add one ounce of beta-quinol. Shake thoroughly and then it will be ready to use. If you prefer, you can use imported bay rum instead of the water and alcohol. The beta-quinol you can get at almost any drug store for not more than fifty cents. This formula should be applied very freely to the scalp after brushing it generously for a few minutes all over. Rub the tonic thoroughly into the scalp with the finger tips.

Any head of hair needs a shampoo to keep the scalp free from scurf and let the roots breathe. Do not use soap. Use eggol, which you can get at any good drug store for twenty-five cents. It has no equal as a shampoo.

STELLA S.—It is no uncommon thing for a woman to develop her bust several inches in a few weeks time naturally and safely, by using the following formula:

In a half pint of cold water, dissolve two ounces roetone and half a cup of sugar, all well mixed together. Of this take two teaspoonfuls three or four times a day in a wine-glass of water, after your meals. The roetone will cost you one dollar at the drug store.

ERUPTIONS—I do not wonder that ordinary tonics have not driven away your pimples. Here is a very effective safe blood cleanser:

Dissolve twelve ounces of granulated sugar in one-half pint of water, add one ounce of sarsene, and mix the whole together thoroughly, then add more water to make a pint. Sarsene is a liquid which you can get at the drug store by the ounce. Get it in the original package. Take one or two teaspoonfuls of this mixture three or four times a day, with a little water if desired.

MISS S. R. B.—Blackheads should not be pinched out. It injures and spots the skin. To get rid of them permanently first wash the face with hot water and soap. Then sprinkle some neroxin generously [illegible] wet with hot water [illegible] for a few minutes on the parts of the skin which are affected with blackheads. You should be able to secure the neroxin at any druggist's for fifty cents.

UGLY—Every spot, every freckle, every blemish on the skin of the face, hands and arms will vanish by using this mixture:

Let half a pint of water come almost to a boil. Add two tablespoonfuls of glycerine. Keep stirring while adding one ounce of zintone, until it is all dissolved. [illegible] If the cream is too thick to pour easily from a bottle, thin it down a little with more hot water. The cream will be white and satiny. [illegible] to the face several times for several minutes. [illegible] this cream on the entire face. Then wipe off with a soft cloth [illegible] apply again and let it dry on the face. Repeat this night and night. Any good druggist will get you have zintone for about fifty cents.

OLD LOOKING—I never have known anything to rejuvenate the skin as splendidly as this. I have seen deep wrinkles leave entirely in a very short time by its use, as well as crows feet and sagging of cheeks. It will make you look years younger. Pour half a pint of hot water in a bowl and place the bowl in a pan of water over a slow fire. To this add two ounces of eptol. Stir until it is dissolved and starts to cream. Then remove from the fire, slowly add two tablespoonfuls of glycerine, and continue to stir until it is cold. Eptol may be obtained for no more than fifty cents at any good drug store. This cream should be applied very liberally and thoroughly rubbed into the skin until it has disappeared. The cream will not grow hair on the face. Keep the cream in an air-tight jar or bottle.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, April 26.—Monsignor Bolo, the Father Vaughan of Paris, who tells the society people of their sins, has begun a campaign against the operations of Satan among the aristocracy of Paris. Like his English brother of the priesthood, Monsignor Bolo says it is no use to talk about sins committed by the horny-handed sons of toil to men and women whose temptations and sins are quite different. Monsignor Bolo says:

"In a certain section of society, two-thirds of the women are mad. One-third is composed of those who, calling themselves feminists are, on the contrary guilty of masculinism. They are bringing about a state of things just the opposite to what they want. That is surely madness.

Another third is made up of strenuous society women. They undoubtedly are victims of mental derangement, whose symptoms are only too patent. Take, for instance, their mania for foreign expressions such as the English word "sport" and the Americanism "to flirt" and the South African exportation, the "tango."

"Is not this dancing mania another sign of madness? David danced before the Ark to show that he was mad with joy. Take away the joy and what is left? I have been told of an old dowager who has attained celebrity in society by the masterly manner in which she dances the 'turkey trot,' despite her seventy years.

"Modern music is neurasthenic. It is simply delirium with the accompaniment of the piano and the violin.

"Taine said fifty years ago of lovers that they studied one another for three weeks, loved one another for three months, quarrelled for three years, and then the children recommenced. In 1913 the three weeks of mutual admiration were replaced by a waltz, the couple travel for three weeks, and then spend three months in litigation. And as there are no children to recommence, they divorce each other so as to commence again themselves. Happily, all women are not like that.

"The salons of today no more resemble the salons of the olden times than the women of today resemble our great grandmothers. People no longer chat. They listen to music or play bridge. We are under the regime of the autobus."

MORE NEW DANCES.

Novelty Steps for Ball Room Find Favor with Paris Masters.

PARIS, April 26.—The revived interest in dancing which was shown by French society leaders last year bids fair to be continued this season, and already two new steps are announced which it is prophesied will put the Boston and the two-step in the shade.

The first is the "Scotch Time," a dance which will be introduced by M. Andre de Fouquieres, the French Beau Brummel. The arbiter of Paris elegance says the new dance is certain of success, as it is quite in accordance with the traditions of the best Paris society.

The International [illegible] of Dancing Masters, which met in Paris, decided on a list of new dances. It includes the Sherlockinette, a dance of four figures, the Bostang, a step which found much favor last year, and the Chichigalpienne of Nicaragua, introduced from the United States and also a favorite of last year.

GILLETT OPENS SEASON.

Founder of Bachelors' Club, Host at Luncheon.

LONDON, April 26.—One can be quite sure the season really has begun by the fact that William Gillett is officially in London and has started his Spring series of meals to "just the right people" with luncheons to members of the diplomatic corps. Gillett is probably the best known and most inveterate bachelor in the world. He knows everybody worth knowing and to go through the lists of his guests at the end of the season inspires the thought, "How does he manage it?" Gillett, who is one of the founders of the exclusive Bachelors' Club, is quite partial toward Americans. Perhaps his most intimate American crony is Frederick Townsend Martin.

FOBS AGAIN THE FASHION.

Are Worn with the Little Coats Which Women Affect.

LONDON, April 26.—The little coat worn with the draped skirt will be seen everywhere this season. These little coats are all belts and buttons, the latter being made of velvet or of steel, and the Georgian effect produced has led to the introduction of the fob. This is made of watered silk and carries a bunch of seals or a tiny watch.

Mrs. Asquith appeared in one of these little coats, and wearing a fob, at a political reception recently. The Georgian fashion has also produced dainty lace ruffles and undersleeves of embroidered lawn, while old paste buttons and buckles promise also to be the rage this season.

PRINCE TO BE FARMER.

Alexandra's Nephew, Erik of Denmark, Takes Up Agriculture.

LONDON, April 26.—Queen Alexandra's nephew, Prince Erik of Denmark, is coming to England to study farming and agriculture at a model farm near Oxford, and may afterwards proceed to the United States for a similar purpose. The Prince has every intention of becoming a practical farmer.

He is twenty-two years of age and since he was sixteen he has steadily pursued this ambition. He is convinced that agriculture means commercial salvation for Denmark, and that her future success and prosperity are dependent upon it.

Royal Alliances Interest Kings of Europe

RULERS and diplomatists of Europe are interested in the coming wedding of two royal Princesses, both of them Germans. The wedding of the daughter of the Kaiser, while a love match, is expected to end a long feud affecting the ruler of Germany. By uniting with a family connected with the reigning house of Germany, Manuel the deposed King of Portugal, may regain some of [illegible]

Politics in Weddings of German Princesses

PRINCESS AUGUSTA VICTORIA TO WED KING MANUEL.

PRINCESS VICTORIA LUISE.

Deposed King Manuel May Get Aid in Regaining Throne of Portugal

Two royal weddings, taken with the many important questions of European politics, are today interesting the [illegible] rulers of the world of Kings and Queens.

In one of them the Princess Victoria Luise, only daughter of the Kaiser, is to marry Prince Ernest August, youngest son of the Duke of Cumberland and Guelph, claimant to the throne of Hanover.

In the other, Manuel, former King of Portugal, is to wed the Princess Augusta Victoria, of Hohenzollern, a distant cousin of the Kaiser and a second cousin of her prospective husband.

State marriages, like State dinners, are matters of set form, and not events in which the contracting persons may dictate the time, the place or the girl. Political events and complications, as a rule, make the matches. It is claimed that in the case of the Kaiser's daughter the rule is not in force, but that the match is one of the heart.

But however, much love there may be in the match, there are the most momentous political situations in the background that the German people have ever had. It is expected that the match will settle the old feud between the Guelphs and the Hohenzollerns that dates from 1866, when blind King George V. of Hanover, the last of the Guelph kings was forced to give up his kingdom. Prussia annexed the kingdom, and the title to the throne is vested in the father of Prince Ernest who is now to marry the only daughter of the [illegible]

To Restore Manuel.

And as to Manuel his match with the Hohenzollern bride is expected to add interest to the political situation in that the Powers will regard it as a set-off to the prestige that England got when she captured the King of Spain with the lure of a British princess. Incidentally, the underground [illegible] of European politics think that there is a [illegible] in the situation for evolving a concerted plan by England, Germany and France for a restoration of Manuel to the throne of Portugal.

By far the most interesting of the situations is that the former King, although in both cases the male side of the matches involves kings without jobs—empires that would fain be recaptured. When in 1908, Manuel, then eighteen years of age, was made King by the assassination of his father and elder brother, it was generally reported that the daughter of the Kaiser would be his bride.

Then the situation would have been far different from what it is now. As a king he would not have been expected to leave his land to propose. The details of his wedding would have been arranged by diplomats, much as commercial travelers might arrange the sale of a carload of goods. Then the father of the selected bride would have brought her to the court of the King, left her in the principal drawing room for five minutes, while the diplomats and officials waited in an ante room for the bride-elect to say the carefully rehearsed speech that the court officials had prepared for her.

But Manuel has only an extra territorial domain in England, where by the courtesy of the English king, the royal flag of Portugal floats. It [illegible] that the King will insist upon his [illegible] right to kingly procedure [illegible] territorial domain, but the laws of the court will be lost in even th[illegible] of the form.

Princess Augustine Victoria of Hohenzollern is chiefly valuable to Manuel because she has money. Her grandfather was Leopold of Hohenzollern, who was selected by Spain as King when Queen Isabella was expelled in 1870, a situation that precipitated the Franco-Prussian war. Leopold withdrew his claim to the throne at the [illegible] of [illegible] and when France went further and wanted to make Germany [illegible] her hands off the succession [illegible] Germany declined any such [illegible] and the war followed.

MORE LIGHT FOR PALACE.

Electricity Installed in the Gloomy Rooms of Old St. James.

LONDON, April 26.—The King intends to make greater use of St. James Palace in the near future. The [illegible] building at the foot of St. James street has been in the hands of the decorators for some time, and it is now announced that an additional sum of $4,000 is to be expended upon the electric lighting.

This last improvement has been agitated for a considerable time, many people maintaining that the magnificent dresses of the [illegible] were not shown off to full advantage at the court functions under [illegible]

SHIP GAMBLING PALACE.

Games to Be Played Outside Three-Mile Limit.

OSTEND, April 26.—M. Marquet, the Casino proprietor, has made arrangements to have a luxurious gambling room fitted up in a large steam yacht, which is to ply between Ostend and other watering-places. Gambling will only take place when the yacht is outside the three-mile limit.

Although games of hazard are now forbidden, a Franco-Belgian group has paid $41,000 for the lease of the gambling room in the Kursaal during the next Summer season.

Paderewski Ribbon Sheared by Police

Russian Gendarmes Cut Off Polish Colors from the Pianist's Bouquets.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 26.—Paderewski has been giving a series of concerts at Warsaw, and was everywhere received with enthusiasm, not only as the greatest of living pianists, but on account of his services [illegible] land.

At one [illegible] many private individuals and public institutions sent bouquets and wreaths [illegible] and white flowers trimmed w[illegible] colored streamers [illegible] or amaranth [illegible] national colors, the police [illegible] for the arrival of the flowers [illegible] concert room and cut off the [illegible] with their swords before they [illegible] the flowers to be arrived in.

AMERICANS AT OPERA.

Society Hurries Back to London for Covent Garden Season.

LONDON, April 26.—The opening of the opera season in Covent Garden Monday brought society hurrying back to town, and the fashionable West End hotels are filling up with Americans who annually come here for rest and change. In the majority of cases the hotels get [illegible] waiters the rest [illegible] ambitious American gets value for his money in the way of social prestige, but it is a very close corporation and not many get inside the ragged fringe of the outer ring of society.

KING AND QUEEN OPENLY SNUB DUKE OF WESTMINSTER

Divorce Plans Plainly Disapproved of by Icy Greetings of George and Mary at Crewe.

LONDON, April 26.—Every one is talking of the icy reception given by the King and Queen to the Duke of Westminster during the royal visit to Crewe this week.

As Lord Lieutenant of the county the Duke was compelled to be present, but his nervousness was almost painful to witness.

Queen Mary on coming face to face with the gay Duke, gave him the very stiffest bow, but declined to enter into conversation. The King shook the Duke's hand in a very formal manner and made stilted remarks. Those who were present declare the Duke looked like a schoolboy who had just received a severe chastisement.

King George, however, is willing to countenance the Duke if the latter refrains from his present intention of forcing divorce upon his Duchess. There is now little doubt that a formal deed of separation will be prepared, and it [illegible] the Duke has raised the allowance which he proposes to give his wife to $150,000 yearly. The Duke, meanwhile, is trying hard to look like an injured husband and a fond parent and has been seen lately walking hand in hand with his little daughter, Lady Ursula Grosvenor.

DUCHESS TO MEET MOTHER.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont Due in London Tomorrow via Mauretania.

LONDON, April 26.—The Duchess of Marlborough, who has been on the Continent arrives in London tomorrow to meet her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who is due here Monday after a trip on board the Mauretania.

It is hoped to arrange a meeting between Mrs. Belmont and Mrs. Pankhurst if the latter's health is sufficiently improved.

Mrs. Belmont also has promised to pay a visit to the militant suffragette headquarters during her brief stay. It is announced that Mrs. Belmont intends to speak at the international women's meeting at Budapest in June.

WANT GERMAN FASHIONS.

BERLIN, April 26.—Professor Dr. Doege, an eminent German expert on the history of costumes, proposes to found a University of Women's Fashions in Berlin. He says this is the only possible way of delivering Germany from the domination of Paris fashions.

Great Institutes Unite in Solving Ocean's Secrets

Monaco's World Famous Department to Exchange Specimens with California Universities.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, April 26.—Dr. Joseph Edward Stubbs, president of the University of Nevada, returned today from Monaco, where he has been the guest of Prince Albert and attended the Zoological Congress, besides examining the most famous oceanographic institute in the world. He sailed today on board the Philadelphia.

In an interview with the correspondent of the International News Service, Dr. Stubbs said arrangements had been made for the interchange of specimens and other material between the Monaco zoological departments and those of the University of California and Leland Stanford University.

"I have written to Presidents Wheeler and Jordan on the subject," said Dr. Stubbs. "Dr. Joubin, the eminent professor of the Paris Oceanographic Institute, knows what admirable work has been done by the California universities and is enthusiastic about the arrangements.

I have made arrangements for the interchange between Monaco and the scientific department of Hawaii.

"I was delighted to find that European scientists quite realized that the mining school of the University of Nevada was the finest in existence. I believe that with a little pressing, Prince Albert who supports the Monaco Institute, could be induced to lecture in our universities. His life is largely devoted to science and to the service of humanity. He has made many valuable discoveries tending to increase the supply of sea food for mankind almost indefinitely and reduce the cost of living. The equipment of the Monaco Institute is wonderful. Every instrument needed for deep sea exploration can be found in it, and its aquaria contain specimens collected between the warm southern seas and the frozen Arctic.

Society writers have gone rather astray in mapping out the future programs of the Duchess of Roxburghe, who was Miss [illegible], and the Marchioness of A[illegible]. Of the latter it was said she would entertain the King and Queen in June and also would give a big ball. As a matter of fact both the Duchess and Marchioness (who was Lady Marjorie Manners) are taking great care of themselves in view of certain interesting events. The Duchess has placed herself in the hands of a comparatively new doctor in Harley street.

Should the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have no heir the title will pass to the Duke's brother, Lord Alistair Innes-Ker, who married Miss Breese of New York, sister of Lady Anglesey, so another American Duchess would be added to the list.

Queen Mary Turns Favor to Yankees

Shunned by Many of Aristocracy, She Lets Bars Down; Mrs. Keppel Now Intimate.

LONDON, April 26.—Shunned more and more by the pleasure loving ladies of the English aristocracy, who look with disfavor upon the boredom of Queen Mary's court functions, the Queen, who was at first bitterly opposed to admitting any "vulgar" Americans to her royal presence, has now completely changed her tactics and is beaming upon American ladies, who are inclined to submit to almost anything to be allowed to break in the fogs of Buckingham Palace. The new American Ambassador will find it easy to present any member of his fair countrywomen at the Court of St. James.

Mrs. Keppel has been the first to enjoy real favors, and she must be an artist of no mean talent for she immediately succeeded in winning the favors of the Queen to such an extent that at the last private ball at the palace she was honored by a seat at Queen Mary's own private table, and a few days later she received an invitation for dinner.

Mrs. Keppel's friends are now laying bets on how short a time she will be able to play her part and bear the royal favors, which certainly cannot appeal to her real character.

Golden Bells for My Lady's Hosiery

Precious Stones Also Dangle from Stockings of Parisian Fashionables.

PARIS, April 26.—Paris women are fast reverting to a semi barbarous Oriental splendor in the extravagant use of jewels and priceless ornaments.

The latest phase is the supersession of the "clocked" stocking by jewelled devices from which are suspended tassels of pearls, rubies and opals which swing with the movements of the wearer. It is predicted by the fashion prophets that golden bells will shortly be introduced.

This new mode has been evolved out of the new split skirt, which demands especially smart shoes and stockings. Various colored shoes are thus being worn to suit the costume of the wearer, and these are decorated with paste buckles set off with streamers of broad black velvet ribbon studded with brilliants, which are crossed over the instep and wound round the leg of the wearer, forming a lattice pattern on a pale groundwork of silk.

GUILD'S GOOD-BY TO CZAR UPSETS DIPLOMATIC RULE

Received in Farewell Audience as Special Courtesy Without Letters of Recall.

RUSSIA EXPECTS C. R. CRANE

Special Cable to Sunday American.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 26.—The Czar's state department has raised a curious question in regard to the diplomatic relations between the United States and Russia in the Official Gazette. It stated that Ambassador Curtis Guild was received in a farewell audience by the Czar.

Nothing was said of the Ambassador having presented letters of recall, although that is the term invariably employed when a diplomat accredited to the Czar takes leave. The explanation now given is that as there is no treaty between Russia and the United States no letters of recall should be considered necessary.

As things are now it appears President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan [illegible] the [illegible] letters of credit [illegible] with such an introduction to Secretary of State Sazonoff as would enable the newcomer to ask for a meeting in case American interests were affected by an infringement of the most favored nation principle.

DICTATE NEW STYLES.

Tailors in England Are Slaves of College Students and Actors.

LONDON, April 26.—The new fashion in men's clothes, while they have shocked the [illegible] citizen, have brought to light the fact that though the tailors of Sackville street and Savile row are responsible for the production, the conception and design came from the universities and the stage.

The undergraduate and the actor evolve the latest ideas and the tailors carry them out. The best dressed men are to be found at Oxford and Cambridge and on the stage. They figure themselves in a suit of a certain and perhaps daring color and of new and striking design. They do not follow the example of other men and put themselves in their tailors' hands. The tailors are in theirs to cut and make according to the undergraduate's or the actor's own idea.

HER BROTHER MAY BE CZAR.

Princess Wilhelmina of Sweden of Attractive Personality.

STOCKHOLM, April 26.—One of the most talked of royalties in Europe just now is Princess Wilhelmina of Sweden, who was the celebrated Grand Duchess Marie Pavlovna, daughter of the Czar's youngest uncle. And now that there is a possibility of her brother becoming the Czar, she is a much more important personage than ever.

Before she became the wife of the second son of King Gustavus Adolphus, five years ago, the Princess was constantly the topic of discussion in court circles because of the unconventional gaiety of her nature. This together with her aviation stunts, which were [illegible] frowned upon by her royal relatives kept her always in the limelight.

PIMPLES ITCHED AND BURNED

Face Disfigured. Used to Itch. Couldn't Sleep Nights. Burned So Would Bleed. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In Few Weeks Free From Pimples.

25 Vernon [illegible] New Haven, Conn.—My face and body and around my shoulders were full of pimples. They looked like little bumps which grew bigger and white, with a [illegible]head on top. When I put my coat on, it rubbed against the pimples on my neck and hurt me awfully. My face was disfigured for a long time, also it used to itch and I couldn't sleep nights from it. The pimples burned so I would scratch at them so that they would bleed and they got worse. I was ashamed to go to any place of amusement.

"I tried all kinds of salves for about two months but without success until I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the paper. I sent for some Cuticura Soap and Ointment and to my relief in a few weeks I was free from the pimples." (Signed) Samuel Cohen, Sept. 20, 1912.

For red, rough, chapped and bleeding hands, itching, burning palms, and painful finger-ends with shapeless nails, a one-night Cuticura treatment works wonders. Soak hands, on retiring, in hot water and Cuticura Soap. Dry, anoint with Cuticura Ointment and wear soft bandages or old, loose gloves during the night. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Ointment (50c.) are sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞ Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

How To Be Beautiful

Are American women deficient in the art of making themselves beautiful? Anita d'Este, a noted authority on beauty, thinks they are.

> "In nearly every country of Europe I have striven to cull the essence of beauty and the mysteries of each system devoted to its culture and the more my search took me upon untrodden ground, the more convinced I became that the most of this wealth lay hidden from the women of America" is what she says in "Modern Fountains of Youth," the opening article of the May number of Good Housekeeping Magazine. She carefully analyzes the various methods by which the beautiful women of Europe scientifically retain their loveliness. This message from a woman who has spent years in examining the "beauty culture" systems of the world has much of information and encouragement for the women of this country.

Read it for a really helpful article. It introduces a new department, "Good Looks," which the Countess of Warwick has consented to conduct for Good Housekeeping Magazine. Every woman interested in improving her good looks will want to read what this noted beauty has to say month by month. Your newsdealer has a copy for you.

Superfluous Hair Truths

Stop Experimenting

There are but few depilatories sold. You think there are hundreds because you have used the same identical preparations under several different names. This is easily explained. Women stop using

So-Called Hair Removers

when they learn that they are harmful. Therefore, they can not be sold under the same name for any length of time. Then the identical, worthless, harmful concoctions are given new names and advertised again as totally different preparations to who innocently buy them over and over again under different names, and this will continue as long as women are so unwise as to experiment with unknown, so-called hair removers.

DeMiracle

Has Stood the Test of Time

De Miracle has been sold as De Miracle for over eleven years, and its name has never been changed. It is acknowledged the world over by eminent authorities as the one safe, perfected hair remover, therefore it is the only depilatory you can use without experimenting.

Leaves No Tell-Tale Smell

If you use De Miracle it will be impossible for any curious person to know that you have used a hair remover because De Miracle evaporates immediately after accomplishing its work, therefore leaves no odor whatever. On the other hand, if you use any depilatory with a distinctive odor, an offensive, tell-tale smell will cling to your skin for hours.

Avoid Permanent Disfigurement

by refusing substitutes. If your dealer will not supply you send $1.00 direct. Free information how to determine which depilatories are harmful and worthless sent in plain, sealed envelope.

A SOUR, GASSY, UPSET STOMACH

"Pape's Diapepsin" Regulates Your Stomach and Ends Indigestion in Five Minutes.

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage, do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; your head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Diapepsin and in five minutes you truly will wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember, the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin, which costs only fifty cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

GROWS BEAUTIFUL, HEAVY HAIR WE PROVE IT—25-CENT "DANDERINE"

Destroys dandruff—Stops falling hair—Cleans and invigorates your scalp—Delightful dressing

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance; freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower; destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.

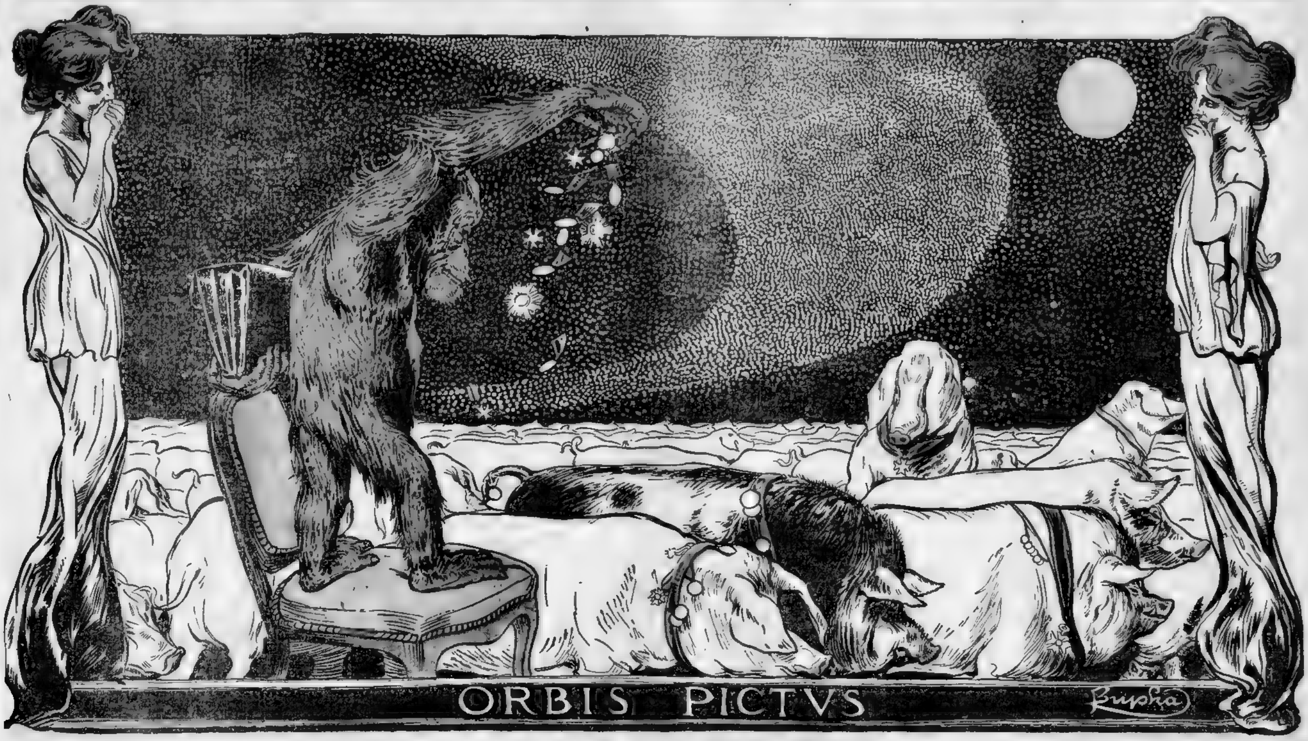
Spirit of the Monkey Still Rules



Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved

To Future Ages Our Civilization Will Look a Good Deal Like This Picture.

It Isn't a Pleasant Picture, but It Is Not a Bad Reproduction of Things as They Are in This World.

The Monkey Representing Vanity and Low Cunning, the Swine Representing Greed and the Lowest Passions, Portray Fairly Well Our Beautiful "Civilization." The Exceptions to This Picture Are Honorable AND FEW.

How Many Human Beings Do YOU Know That Do Not Bear a Very Strong Resemblance to the Frivolous Monkey, or to the Still Lower Animals That He Showers with His Childish "Decorations"?

How Long Will It Take the Human Race to Eliminate the Monkey and the Swine from Its Nature, and Be Real and Entirely Made Up of MEN?

If any man doubts that the human race has come up from the lower animals, or that it has passed through the different lower forms of animal life, he ought to be convinced by the fact that the lower animals survive in us still and control us.

Pessimism is a bad thing. But it is useful for human beings to realize occasionally how little they amount to, and how much work they must do, how far they must travel before they shall be fit to call themselves civilized or really HUMAN.

GREED and VANITY—these are the most powerful forces in human beings.

And there is just one way to rule human beings—by appealing to their vanity, and appealing to their selfishness.

The cunning politician, when he wants to get votes and have the crowd behind him, appeals to the two mean passions, vanity and avarice.

In the old days, successful war, gratifying national vanity, was the great weapon, the great influence.

In these days, what we call PROSPERITY, that is to say, money, gratification for the avaricious and the greedy, is the great weapon.

The old leader of the savage tribe in America said to his red-skinned followers: "Come with me and we shall bring back scalps and glory. And you can dance around the fire and brag to the squaws."

The modern leader of the American tribe, Democratic or Republican, says: "Come with me, and I will GIVE YOU MONEY. I'll pay you higher wages, or I will get you things for less by reducing the cost of living. I will give you work at good wages—and short hours. Stick to me, and you will be richer, have more, and do less to get it."

There was a leader long ago, who spoke neither of vanity nor of wealth. He spoke of the poor that needed protection, of children that were outrageously and cruelly treated, of women, shamefully judged and unjustly treated. He had nothing to offer to men's vanity, nothing to offer to their greed—THEY CRUCIFIED HIM.

There is nothing puzzling about the picture on this page to the man who knows how other men have been ruled.

The monkey on the chair with his ministerial portfolio under his left arm, and the shower of decorations pouring from his right hand, represents European government as it is now—REPRESENTS THE SYSTEM BY WHICH NAPOLEON WITH HIS BIG INTELLECT GOVERNED IN HIS DAY.

He inherited from a tired revolution a nation that considered itself radical, and said that it was devoted to the rights of man, forever pledged to unselfish, brotherly action.

It was Napoleon who invented the Legion of Honor, with its little red ribbon that a man wears in his buttonhole, to show that he is better than somebody else, with its grand cross, its sash of silk, or "grand cordon."

Napoleon said cynically and truly: "I pin one of these crosses onto the chest of your ardent radical. And in a minute I make him a conservative, and a supporter of the Empire."

Napoleon, the cunning, far-seeing man, understood human nature well. He invented his Legion of Honor and endless other dignities to feed the vanity of those who thought themselves republicans and radicals—and they flocked around his throne, and gave him all the millions of men he wanted to kill in foreign wars.

He dealt successfully with the crowd beneath him, as this monkey, handing out his decorations, deals with the crowd of swine below HIM.

They fasten the medals to their necks, or to their tails, and go off happy and contented, vainly believing that they are better than some other pigs of their own size and weight.

Nobody knows the suffering, the struggling of the men and women in this country and in every country piteously trying to be "better than somebody else," or to be recognized by somebody else as an equal.

The smallest town has its "society leader," blissfully vain in her belief in her own superiority, and its crowds of bitterly disappointed, striving, struggling women—and men as well—trying to enter the charmed circle of silly social vanity.

There are two struggles in America, one for advancement socially, and the other for advancement financially.

One class is struggling for the little medal of social distinction that the society monkey can bestow. And the other is engaged in ardent, swine-like seeking for financial swill.

Here and there you find a few men or women, interested in other and better things, trying to discover new truths, trying to protect those that need help—but the real crowd, the big crowd, THE ACTUAL NATION, is made up of the monkeys and the swine, made up of vanity and greed—with occasional foolish and meaningless moralizing.

Unhappily, men who believe themselves sincere and that would like to be sincere, thousands and hundreds of thousands of them, are apparently good and unselfish, because they have no opportunity to be otherwise.

A man with the intelligence and knowledge of Thackeray, whose descriptions of snobs proved that he understood the folly of social distinction, was obliged to confess that his heart would beat more quickly, if he could walk down Piccadilly with a duke on either arm.

A big Socialist leader in the West—a man of power and intelligence, who does not always deceive himself, has back of him some tens of thousands of admirers. These men all declare themselves "friends of man." They believe that they are unselfish, that they want only their share, and want everybody else to have HIS share. The leader was asked once: "How many of your followers would stick to your Socialist party if they should each inherit $50,000 over night?"

He replied very honestly: "Perhaps one out of a hundred, probably not so many as one out of one hundred, perhaps one out of a thousand." He added, very truly: "However, that doesn't matter. The world is made better, not by what men really are, but by what they think they are, and by what they try to be."

* * *

Napoleon pinned a decoration on a man who had sworn to live and die for the REPUBLIC—and the man promptly swore that he would live and die for Napoleon and the [illegible]

A woman in some little Western town is admitted to some social organization, or invited to the house of some local aristocratic nobody. And immediately her poor nose goes up into the air, her heart beats, and her whole view of the world changes.

A little boy in school is made monitor. And in a moment he is as vain as though he had been made Emperor of Russia. His only thought is to exercise authority, as severely as possible, upon the boys below him.

A man is educated, knows something about the history of the world, begins life for himself, and plunges into a frantic struggle for the making of money, that is as unworthy in every way as the average life of one of those swine parading before the monkey. He always tells himself that after awhile he will get his feet out of the financial trough—but he never does.

Ours is a rather poor kind of a human race. Selfish, mean, capable of a selfishness that lasts throughout life, incapable of abstract thought for more than half a minute at a time.

We are unworthy human microbes, living on a wonderful and beautiful planet, surrounded by cosmic wonders that should lift even our mean souls above the ground.

Look at the races of a crowd, ugly, angry, unhealthy. You will study a thousand faces before you will find a gleam of abstract thought, or real ideal longing.

It is well for us to know ourselves as we are. But luckily, and that is our constant consolation, we can look back to conditions infinitely worse than those we see today.

At least, there is a slight grunting of remorse among the swine. And occasionally some monkey appears among us with a forehead a little higher, and a jaw a little smaller, and he tries to do better than the other monkeys have done. Fortunately, also, men have only lived on this planet for about 250,000 years. They have had a spoken language probably for not more than 150,000 years.

They have still millions upon millions of years to live here and develop.

We not only hope, WE ABSOLUTELY KNOW, that progress in the future equal to the progress that we have made in the past will bring us up to a stage in civilization in which we shall have left behind us the swine and the monkey, in which we shall have developed our brains, and in which we shall be truly human.

Let those who can work for that better day, and look with pity and without hatred upon the monkeys and the swine that form the mass. And let no man be discouraged because he can do but little. To do little and Know that you are doing little is greatness in itself.

"Once upon a time there came down from the Thessalian Plains southward to the city of Athens a man dissatisfied.

"He entered the Agora and he came upon Sokrates. 'Sir,' cried he, 'I am a very miserable fool.' 'The thing is possible,' said Sokrates. 'For here have I,' went on the discontented one, 'been striving these thirty years to build in Thessaly a Parthenon. And, lo, I can only manage a mud hut.'

"'Take heart, my friend,' cried Sokrates, 'for you are in better case than most. For there are few enough of men who try to build a Parthenon, and, of the few, the most part build themselves a mud hut and take it for a Parthenon.'

"And the Thessalian went back to Thessaly and built his temple."

Build your little mud hut, do your best,

DANGERS IN UNCLEAN MILK AND HOW TO AVOID THEM

By GEORGE LLOYD MAGRUDER, A. M., M. D.

Emeritus Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, School of Medicine, Georgetown University, Washington, D. C.

(From "The Solution of the Milk Problem." Copyright, 1913, by George Lloyd Magruder, A. M., M. D.)

THERE is today not a shade of doubt that impure raw milk and cream are prominent factors in keeping up the prevalence of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, infantile disorders and other diseases and impaired physical conditions. The continued high mortality of adults and infants from these preventable diseases can be reduced enormously by heeding the teachings of modern sanitarians. This education must be commenced at the farm, and be continued to and include the consumer. There must be co-operation by every one who handles milk to protect it from contamination. The public must pay for this care by a few cents extra per quart and the farmer must give a better product for the increased price that he must receive. Dirty milk should not be bought at any price.

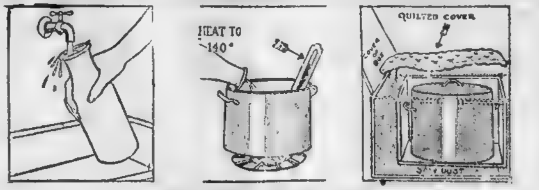
During the last few months the subject of dangers from contaminated milk and the methods of prevention have attracted unusual attention from physicians and others interested in the conservation of the public health. It is now generally conceded that clean, cold and properly pasteurized milk is one of the most important means, if not the most important factor, in reducing disease and death. These conditions furnish safe milk for every one. It is the easy and safe solution of the milk problem.

The time is opportune for presenting in everyday language the facts in regard to milk, that the dangers may be understood and the remedial measures may be applied. This is desirable, because, even yet, notwithstanding the indisputable evidence that has been presented, there are many persons of intelligence who seem to ignore these dangers and still use and permit those under their charge to use poisonous milk. This is notable in a number of schools, hospitals, infant asylums, hotels and other eating places.

To bacteriology the world is indebted for the positive knowledge of the causes of many diseases. Bacteria grow with amazing rapidity in milk, since milk of all media furnishes the most favorable conditions required for their growth. Under favorable conditions these bacteria attain maturity within an hour. In raw market milk as many as one billion and a quarter germs have been found in a single teaspoonful. The sample was taken from the milk can in a wagon on a regular round in the Summer. In a level tablespoon of ice cream over two billion germs have been found. Imagine the possible result if many of these had been disease-producing bacteria!

Now, the important points in regard to the destruction of bacteria in milk are these: Below fifty degrees Fahrenheit the growth of many bacteria is checked, but they survive even below the freezing point in some cases. Above fifty degrees Fahrenheit they begin to multiply with marked rapidity as the warmth increases. When the temperature rises above 100 degrees, however, the various varieties begin to die. As the result of investigations by men of the highest authority the world over, it has been found that all disease-producing germs commonly present in milk are killed at a temperature of 150 degrees maintained for twenty minutes. This degree of heat and time of exposure do not in any way destroy either the chemical or nutritive properties of milk, nor do they alter the taste, nor do they destroy the cream line. There is no perceptible alteration in the milk.

Millions have been spent to purify water supplies of cities. Why should not the same concern be exercised in regard to a contaminated milk supply?



One Way of Making Milk Safe to Drink.

Wash the Paper Covered Top in Hot Water. Pour the Milk Into a Pot and Keep It on the Stove Until the Thermometer Shows 140 Degrees. Put in a Box a Smaller Box. Fill the Space Between the Sides and Bottoms Tightly with Sawdust. Put the Milk Pot, Covered, in the Smaller Box. Cover It with a Clean Quilted Cloth and Let It Remain Twenty Minutes.

The dangers are far greater

Tuberculosis is the one disease the germs of which enter milk almost exclusively from the cow. Upon rare occasions the germ enters the milk from coughing, sneezing or carelessness of a milker affected with the disease. Tubercle bacilli are secreted in the milk when there is tuberculosis disease of the udder. Frequently milk is found contaminated with tubercle germs for some time before the disease is detected in the cow from which the milk was obtained. The commonest source of contamination is in the discharge from cows affected with the disease. The discharge falls into the pail from the flanks, udder and tail of the cow at the time of milking. The bacilli do not multiply in milk, but they do survive and do grow when subjected to favorable conditions.

Neither the processes of making ice cream nor butter destroy them. Cream is found to have many more germs than milk, since the germs adhere to the fat globules and rise to the surface with them. The Department of Agriculture found tubercle germs in the refuse from the separators in 33 per cent. of the creameries examined. This startling revelation warns us that skimmed milk should not be used for man or beast in a raw state. Tubercle bacilli are frequently found in market milk, as the Bureau of Animal Industry has shown that from 5 to 25 per cent. of dairy cows responded to the tuberculin test.

The investigations made relative to the use of pasteurized milk from tuberculous cows and from cows actually affected with udder tuberculosis prove that it has no objectionable influence on the body and that it does not injure the health in any determinable way.

The safety secured by pasteurizing the milk is a very important point from an economic standpoint. The milk of every one of these apparently healthy cows could be used with absolute safety in the rearing of children, and in the raising of calves and hogs, and for all household purposes after being brought to and held at the proper heat for the destruction of the tubercle germ. No complicated apparatus is necessary to accomplish this much-desired result. What a boon to mankind if this fact would be accepted and applied! The farmer, in time, would thus secure a healthy herd and healthy hogs. His resources would be promptly augmented. There would be less destruction of live stock and condemnation of food products derived from this source.

Reliable evidence has shown that more than 25 per cent of all cases of tuberculosis in children under sixteen years of age are of bovine origin, and 12½ per cent. of fatal cases of tuberculosis among children under five years of age are due to bovine tubercle bacilli. These facts have so impressed the authorities of France that it has been recommended, with a view to saving the infants of France from tuberculosis, that all milk be heated to 176 degrees Fahrenheit.

Repeated outbreaks of virulent sore throat, accompanied with high mortality, have been traced to the presence in milk of a streptococcus. This streptococcus may get into the milk from a human source or from the presence of streptococci in diseased udders. The occurrence of over 600 cases of sore throat in Stockholm in the year 1908 was traced to a streptococcus abscess in the udder of a cow in a herd that furnished milk to those who became infected. The characteristics of the two streptococci were identical. Such outbreaks have since occurred in Chicago, Boston and Baltimore, and uniformly the cause has been traced to a streptococcus.

But it has been found that the disease does not stop at the throat. Serious diseases of other parts of the body, as the heart, the brain and the joints have been traced as resulting from the sore throat infection. Obviously these epidemics of septic sore throat furnish a most powerful argument for the pasteurization of the entire milk supply.

Germs of typhoid fever grow with amazing rapidity in milk, and soon increase the danger arising from this infection. A few germs will quickly multiply to such an extent that the whole supply with which it comes in contact will be contaminated. Mobler and Washburn found that the typhoid bacillus survived twenty-one days in milk kept sweet and 151 days in butter kept in cold storage. This draws attention to the fact that the variety of germs in milk is more to be considered than the actual numbers.

Typhoid fever germs enter milk entirely from sources outside the cow. The cow's flank and udder may become contaminated from the cow having waded in streams polluted with the discharges from fever patients. Then the washing with cold water of the utensils used in the handling of milk is a prolific source of the germs. The fact that typhoid fever is eminently a rural disease, occurring two and a half times more frequently in the country than in the city, and the known contamination of the water supplied by farms point to the necessity of exercising great care to avoid these sources of danger.

The milkers and handlers of milk also infect the fluid. These men frequently have the disease for days before being compelled to take to bed. Now typhoid fever is a disease that is spread especially by germ or bacillus carriers. Five years ago over fifty cases of typhoid in Washington, D. C., were traced to the supply of milk from a single farm.

There is no specific germ that causes malnutrition and the gastro-intestinal troubles of infants. It is the general observation that the presence of streptococci and colon bacilli in milk does augment these disorders. Excessive numbers in milk of any germ, even those at times considered harmless, has been found also to be productive of these troubles. The presence of colon bacilli is the source of great danger to children.

To secure the best results milk of each cow must be cooled immediately after milking in a house separated from the cow barn and well protected from flies by screens. This cooling must be accomplished by pouring milk over coils through which running water passes, iced if necessary. The placing of large shipping cans of milk in receptacles of water is unsatisfactory, from the slowness of the process of cooling and the prevention of the ready escape of contaminating odors.

The present method of placing milk outside the doors and windows of houses hours before occupants awake is another serious menace. It is well worth trying to revolutionize the methods and time of delivering milk. If it could be delivered soon after its arrival at the distributor's depot the consumer would secure much fresher milk, at times milk of the same day.

If the lessons taught by these observations be heeded a great step will be made toward the control of many preventable diseases and an immediate diminution in deaths and other tuberculosis, typhoid fever, diphtheria and other milk-born diseases will be secured. The slaughter of infants will also be arrested.

Let it be remembered that contaminated milk is many times more dangerous than contaminated water, because disease germs which would starve in water rapidly multiply in milk.

Dollars spent by the hundred for prevention will save millions needed for those afflicted with disease, to say nothing of the days of suffering and pangs of grief that will be avoided.

Mothers, arise, and demand with one voice that your physicians and lawmakers secure SAFE MILK TO SAVE YOUR BABIES.

Lowly Dandelion Appears on Bill of Fare

ABOUT this time of year the dandelion begins to make its appearance.

Perhaps some of the following recipes may help New England housewives to vary the usual method of preparing "greens."

DANDELION GREENS.

GATHER the leaves when they are young and tender. Wash them thoroughly in two or three waters, then put them into a granite kettle, cover with boiling water, add a piece of soda the size of a pea, let them come to a boil and then drain off the water. Cover them again with boiling water, add a small piece of fat salt pork and cook from one to two hours. When they are tender, remove the pork and drain the greens in a colander, chop them into fine pieces add salt and pepper to taste and a little melted butter. Garnish with hard boiled eggs. Vinegar will be found a desirable accompaniment.

DANDELION WINE.

LOOK over very carefully enough dandelion blossoms to make five quarts (scant). Put them in an earthen vessel, pour over them four quarts of boiling water and let them stand for twenty-four hours. Add the grated rind and juice of four lemons to three and a half pounds of sugar. Dissolve it over a slow fire and add the water which has been drained from the dandelion blossoms. Let it stand in a jar for two weeks, then bottle it, leaving it uncorked for a time.

The cowslip or marsh-marigold is another perennial herb which appears in the Spring, even earlier than the dandelion. It will be found growing in swamps and marshy lowlands, and may be known by its showy yellow flowers. The green leaves and the young flower buds, when properly cooked, are wholesome and agreeable, and are considered by many far superior to spinach. They may be served as greens, or as a salad.

DANDELION SALAD.

THE young, tender leaves only should be used for salad. Wash them carefully, break in lengths of about two inches, arrange in a cold dish and dress with French dressing. Hard boiled eggs, or beet roots, chopped fine and sprinkled over it, are a pleasant addition to dandelion salad.

COWSLIP GREENS.

VERY little water is needed in cooking these greens, but the buds and leaves should be washed very carefully and a little salt sprinkled over them. Then put them where they will cook slowly until enough water has been extracted from the plants to prevent them from burning. Then cook, closely covered, until they are tender. Drain, chop fine, add pepper and melted butter to suit the taste.

Cassidy Tells How to Know What Jellies to Buy to Get Real Purity

"Mother's Home-Made Jellies" are the topics of Mr. Cassidy's article today.

He explains to New England housewives why the jellies they buy at the stores are often cheaper than the jellies they make at home.

There are good jellies and bad jellies. Mr. Cassidy tells about both today.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

A few days ago I went into a store in Roxbury. While there I noticed some glasses of jelly on the counter at one side. From where I stood, the label read like this:

PURE
Apple Jelly

I walked across the store to look closer, and I read the label again. This is what I read:

PURE
Contains 1-10 of 1% Benzoate of Soda
Apple Jelly

When I read that label, I decided to tell the housewives of New England something about the jellies displayed on the shelves of some of our stores.

The jelly whose label I have reproduced above is put up in Boston. I consider the label misleading, and under a strict interpretation of the law, illegal. The word "Pure" has in my opinion, no place on any product containing benzoate of soda.

Such a jelly as that could not be shipped in interstate commerce, because the label is misleading.

Since coming to Boston I have had the good fortune to taste some "spice jelly," made by a "New England Housewife" of the sort that has made New England famous. It was barberry jelly, spiced and flavored until fit for a king's tongue. I don't know the recipe, but I do know that that jelly was one to be proud of.

What a difference between a jelly like that, and the sort of stuff you buy in the stores, dosed with a little phosphoric acid to give it a fine, keen, live tang. Without the phosphoric acid, it would be dull and tasteless.

Let me tell you a story—a story that has its touch of human interest and that gets right at the heart of the jelly industry at the same time.

There was an old woman in Philadelphia—an old friend of my mother's family. She was over seventy-five when she died last year.

Two years ago she came to the house one day to see my mother, and I got into talk with her. I asked her what she was doing.

"Picking berries," she answered.

"Where?" I asked.

"In a preserving house," she said.

"Tell me how you work," I asked again.

She told me.

"They pay us thirty cents a crate for picking over berries," she said. "I'm a pretty slow worker, and I can't pick over a crate a day. The berries we pick over are those discarded by dealers, or those laid aside in the sorting processes, where berries are prepared for retail sales.

"We have three cans. Into one we put the crushed and dirty berries. Into another we put all that are at all firm, and the green berries go into the third can.

"The crushed and dirty ones go to the preserving kettles. The firm ones go to storage houses, to be kept till the season when berries are scarce, and the green ones are kept in the same way."

"Do you wash the dirty ones?" I asked.

"Wash them—no indeed. Why, if you washed them, you'd wash them all away," she answered.

Now that story shows the conditions in the worst type of jelly factory. Do not understand me as saying all factories are the same. There are many that are putting out sound, reliable product. If you want to know how to pick out these products, let me give you this rule:

Read the label carefully and see if these words appear:

"Guaranteed under the National Food and Drugs Act, Serial No. —."

If these words appear, it is safe to assume that the rest of the label tells the truth—for the federal authorities require truthful labels.

If the label contains the words "phosphoric acid," "benzoate of soda," "sodium benzoate," "benzoic acid," "sodium sulphite," "sulphite of sodium," OR ANY OTHER CHEMICAL TERM THAT YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND, my advice to you is—DON'T BUY THAT JELLY.

The best firms in making their jelly use only fruit, fruit juice and sugar. Where the label reads like a doctor's prescription, the product is of doubtful character.

The fundamental evil of the jelly and preserve and jam business is that unripe, or damaged fruit is often used. You housewives know that you can't get good results by using poor fruit. But the manufacturer has a powerful assistant. Glucose is the agent that debases this product, as it does so many others. Here is the type of label you will often see:

Apple Jelly
Compound
Contains 80% sugar, 35% glucose, 19% apple juice, 15% fruit, 1% phosphoic acid

Now that label should be mistrusted by every purchaser. The word "compound" is a danger mark, covering a multitude of evils. The jelly itself contains a little apple juice, made from the cores and peelings of apples; a little fruit, some sugar, a great deal of glucose and a dash of acid. That would be a very tasty jelly—in its way. But it is a jelly that should be driven off the market.

I have bought jellies the label on which stated that the product contained as high as 65 per cent. glucose.

Often there is a little gelatine to give strength and body to the mixture.

I want to repeat what I have often said before in this column. Glucose is probably all right in itself. Many eminent chemists declare it is a deleterious substance—Dr. Wiley among them. But give the glucose people the benefit of the doubt and say that glucose is as healthy as cane sugar, though not as sweet.

The fact remains that glucose by its nature lends itself to such tricks as this jelly recipe. It is a product ready at hand for any one who wants to adulterate or debase foods of a certain character. And one of the worst evils that can be laid at glucose's door is that it makes possible the manufacture of this evil class of jellies and jams.

Artificial color and artificial flavors add to the fraud at times. They are glucose's accessories, assisting in the debasing process.

You housewives—become knowing on the subject of jams and jellies. If you buy them at the stores, read the labels. Buy no jelly not guaranteed under the national law, and buy no jelly so guaranteed if it contains products the names of which are mysteries to you.

You know what ought to go into jelly. When something else is used, you have a right to distrust that jelly.

To New England Housewives.

Hundreds of you have written to Harry P. Cassidy asking for information about different kinds of food. He has answered most of these inquirers by letter.

Now Mr. Cassidy opens a new department, for the especial benefit of you women who WANT TO KNOW WHETHER YOUR FOOD IS PURE.

Each Sunday Mr. Cassidy will print a few letters on this page, with his answers to the inquiries these letters contain.

Every man or woman who is puzzled over some food problem is invited to submit the puzzle to Mr. Cassidy. If he can help you, he will.

Cassidy's Letter Box

By HENRY P. CASSIDY.

IN opening this question and answer department, I am undertaking an experiment. The success of that experiment will be determined by the interest shown by BOSTON AMERICAN readers. Since coming to Boston I have been able to give personal answers to the inquiries of many New England men and women. Through this department, I want to give those answers to all the readers of the food articles, as well as to the individual inquirer.

Letters of inquiry may be signed with the name in full, with initials only, or with an assumed name. And not only inquiries, but "tips" as to impure foods, or other letters on food topics, will be published from time to time.

"A Suffering Citizen" has written the following letter, that is full of interest:

Dear Mr. Cassidy:

Long may you live and prosper in the good fight you are making. May you keep up the fight till we all know what we are buying and eating.

May I suggest that you look into the matter of vinegar when you have the time.

I know of cider mills in this State that grind apples and the next day ship the cider for pure vinegar. This perhaps is not as bad as to use chemicals entirely, but surely no one wants to use this doctored stuff thinking it is the genuine.

One word about flour.

Most people do not know that its whiteness is a measure of its unfitness to sustain life and strength. I believe that the public should be educated to know that flour is white only when the most necessary elements are removed. To do this, I would place the percentage of food value on every package. And I would have this percentage determined by analysis of the government testers.

I think Mr. Fitzgerald's plan to have the State take over the milk business is an excellent one, and so would every other person who has seen cows kept in stables which are cleaned once a year, or who have seen cows ill for so long that they became almost skeletons, while their milk was being used for food. The farmer now gets for his milk hardly enough to pay for the grain and hay he gives the cows. From the State he could get more, while the consumer would pay less.

A Suffering Citizen.

That's an excellent letter. The suggestion of stamping the food value of its contents on every package is an exceedingly advanced idea, and one upon which I plan to write articles at a later date.

Dear Mr. Cassidy:

Some time ago I was directed by my physician to use gluten flour. I purchased what I supposed to be gluten flour at ———'s store. After using three sacks and deriving no benefit, I became acquainted with a lady who is using genuine gluten. She assured me that she was greatly benefited by it, and she informed me that what ——— sold me as gluten flour was about half strength. The words "Wilson's Gluten" appear in large letters on the sacks I bought, while "47 standard" appears in small type below. I report the matter to you because I deem it an outrage that people suffering from that terrible disease, diabetes, should be so grossly deceived.

MRS. M.

Some years ago, there was a great deal of poor gluten flour on the market. Much of that sold today is just what it purports to be.

I am not familiar with "Wilson's Gluten." The words "47 standard" might mean one of several things. The government standard is 35.6 per cent. protein. A gluten flour containing 38.7 protein above the government standard, is the Educator Gluten Flour, sold by most grocers, and packed by the Johnson Educator Biscuit Company.

How to Apply Business Efficiency to Your Servants and Home

An Important Analysis of Time and Money Waste in Housework, and the Methods of Avoiding It, by Mrs. Christine Frederick, The Noted Household Expert.

(Mrs. Frederick's book, "The New Housekeeping; Efficiency Studies in Home Management," will be published next month by Doubleday, Page Co., and is sure to attract much favorable comment. Mrs. Frederick is the wife of J. George Frederick, editor of the Efficiency Magazine. At their home in Greenlawn, L. I., they are fitting up an efficiency experiment kitchen, where further experiments in methods, devices, foods, etc., will be carried on.)

By Mrs. CHRISTINE FREDERICK,

National Secretary of the Associated Clubs of Domestic Science—Consulting Household Editor of The Ladies' Home Journal

Mrs. Christine Frederick, the Distinguished Household Efficiency Expert.

Mrs. Frederick in Her Efficiency Experiment Kitchen at Greenlawn, L. I. Note Carefully the Arrangement of Utensils and Furniture.

ONE evening several years ago, when without a servant, I counted the number of pots, pans and dishes I was washing. There were eighty-seven in all. I timed myself on this unpleasant old task of washing dishes, which I hated from the bottom of my heart, and I found it took forty-five minutes to wash, dry and lay them away. When I was through I was so heated and tired that I didn't feel like doing anything else all the evening.

That evening, however, we were entertaining a friend who was prominent in the new science of industrial efficiency. He and my husband were discussing it, and I heard them say "motion study," and such mysterious phrases as "standardization" and "standard practice." Although I was tired I found myself interested in spite of myself. I asked him to explain what he meant, and he did, telling me exactly how efficiency was revolutionizing the office and the factory.

"Do you mean to tell me," I asked skeptically, "that you think such things could be applied to a home?"

"They are universally applicable to any work anywhere," he replied seriously.

Still half skeptical, I decided to experiment. That was three years ago, and I can say that it has revolutionized my entire thought and practice about my home, and convinced me that a new era for woman's work—traditionally never done—is coming.

Emerson has expounded twelve now famous principles of efficiency. I have proved that it is just as possible to apply each one of these twelve in running my home as it is to apply them with success in any factory or office.

1—Ideals.
2—Common sense.
3—Competent counsel.
4—Standardized operations.
5—Standardized conditions.
6—Standard practice.
7—Dispatching.
8—Scheduling.
9—Reliable, immediate and accurate methods.
10—Discipline.
11 Fair deal.
12—Efficiency reward.

No woman can make a success of her business unless she knows why she is running it, and what are the ideals she wishes to follow. The clearer the woman's ideals, the better home maker she will be.

Then this matter of common sense. It is certainly common sense to hang a pot close to hand instead of stooping for it.

We have heard much of "motion study" and "standard practice," and how can these points be applied in the home? There is my old hated task of washing dishes. I used wrong methods. I cramped my back over a sink twenty-eight inches high, when I am a tall woman and need to work on a surface at least thirty-one inches high. I was using the wrong tools and I wasted time running about for things I needed. Since then I have "standardized," not only washing dishes, but all tasks involving the hands, or the head and hands working in co-operation. I have examined hundreds of sinks and tested women of all heights, and have been able to work out a table of the relative height of the worker and the working surface.

Height of woman.	Proper height of working surface.
4 feet 10 inches	27 inches
4 " 11 "	27½ "
5 " "	28 "
5 " 1 "	28½ "
5 " 2 "	29 "
5 " 3 "	29½ "
5 " 4 "	30 "
5 " 5 "	30½ "
5 " 6	31 "
5 " 7	31½ "
5 " 8 "	32 "
5 " 9 "	32½ "
5 " 10 "	33 "
5 " 11 "	33½ "

Next to be considered are the causes of present day household inefficiency.

By watching myself and others at work I have been able to group the causes of 80 per cent. of the inefficiency of modern housework.

(1) The worker does not have all the needful tools or utensils at hand before her when she begins to work; therefore,
(2) She wastes time and effort walking to, hunting for or fetching ingredients, tools or materials she neglected to have at hand when she began the task.
(3) She stops in the middle of one task to do something else quite unrelated.
(4) She lowers the efficiency of good work by losing time putting tools or work away, generally due to poor arrangement of kitchen, pantry and closets
(5) She uses a poor tool, or a wrong one; or works at a table, sink, ironing board, or moulding board of the wrong height from the floor.
(6) She loses time because she does not keep sufficient supplies on hand, and because she does not keep her tools and utensils in good condition.

When I came to study the conditions under which I worked in my kitchen at cooking and serving meals, I found that it was impossible to do standardized work under such unstandardized conditions

Not only were my sink, tables and stove too low for efficient work, but they were in the wrong relation to each other.

(A—Preparing; B—Clearing.)

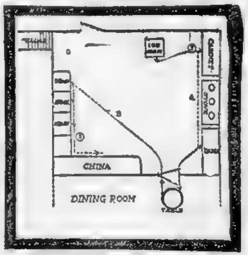

Diagram Showing Proper Arrangement of Equipment which Makes a Simple Chain of Steps in Either Preparing or Clearing Away a Meal.
(A—Preparing; B—Clearing.)

THE PROPER ROUTINE OF HOUSEHOLD PROCESSES.

I have since studied out the proper relation for this larger equipment and found the diagram shown herewith the best arrangement.

In studying all my kitchen work I found that there were just two separate processes under which all tasks could be grouped:

Group I. Preparing Meal.	Equipment.
1—Preparing all foods. 2—Cooking all foods.	Icebox, pantry, storage, table, kitchen cabinet, stove utensils, table, trays.

Group II. Clearing Meal.	Equipment.
1—Removing all foods. 2—Washing utensils. 3—Laying away dishes	Trays, tables, sink, closets, pantry, icebox

Every task done—peeling potatoes or washing a skillet—can be divided clearly under one or the other group. One group is those processes which prepare the meal; the second group is those processes which clear away the meal. Each of those processes covers distinct equipment. The reason for so much inefficiency in kitchen work is due almost solely because these two processes are not kept separate, and because, particularly, the equipment of each process is not kept together.

Suppose, for instance, we wish to make an omelet. We take eggs and milk from the icebox or pantry (follow diagram), beat it at a table, cook on a stove, serve on platter and take to dining room. This is the preparing process of this dish, and is the simplest method we can follow. The return trip, or the processes of clearing away—I take the empty platter from the dining room to the kitchen sink, wash it and lay it away.

Now if the kitchen table, stove and sink are in the right relation to each other, we can make our omelet or any other dish, with the least possible number of steps, motion, time and fatigue. But if the stove, sink and tables are not in the right relation to each other it will require twice as much energy to cook and serve our omelet.

The definite equipment of the processes of Group I, come in order this way:

Icebox, table, stove, serving table, pantry, cabinet.

The definite equipment of processes of Group II. come in this order:

Sink table, sink, china and dish closets.

In my small kitchen, therefore, I have arranged the equipment as follows: First, at the south, an icebox, then a kitchen cabinet, then the stove, and at last a small serving table. At the other side of the room come, first, to left, china shelves, then sink, and last, at right, sink table.

To make my omelet, I take materials from the icebox, turn to the right, where I beat it on the surface of the cabinet, turn one more step to right for stove, and a last step to the right lays it on a serving table, when I carry it to dining room.

On the return trip I take the soiled platter from dining room directly to the sink table, wheel left to sink, left to drain, and, last, left to closet shelves.

I have drawn two diagrams which show the making of an omelet under two arrangements of equipment. One is a steady track from icebox to table; the other is a crossing and recrossing, like the tracks of a hound after a hare.

BUSINESS-LIKE RECORDS FOR THE HOME.

Now, I am not a system fiend, but I found after wasting much time and still more valuable nervous energy, that I simply couldn't waste this time and energy on searching, pulling and hunting for all my household data. In keeping a home I have rent and gas receipts, butcher's and milk bills, addresses of friends and trades people, and many other kinds of data. In my husband's office are up-to-date filing systems and every convenience for the systematic keeping of data. Why should I at home not have my records reliable, immediate and accurate?

So after much experiment I worked out a filing drawer with cards, in which I kept cards of all the important things I want to know. In this fifteen-inch box which stands on my desk is practically all the data concerned in the entire running of my home. I have called it my "Time and Worry-Saving Family Cabinet," and any woman can get such a box or drawer, filed with 3x5 cards and make up her own subheads for her own needs.

Here is the complete list of the subjects as I have worked them out

(1) Household Accounts—Subdivided by months, and with a yearly "recapitulation." Separate cards for "personal," etc., and for each of the children

Under every month's subdivision of household accounts there is a set of plain, ruled 3x5-inch cards. In my system they number fourteen. They are as follows:

(1) Groceries
(2) Meats
(3) Vegetables and fruit
(4) Bread, milk.
(5) Ice, cleansers
(6) Service
(7) Laundry, soap, starch, bluing.
(8) Fuel, gas, electricity.
(9) Furnishings and repairing
(10) Medical and drugs.
(11) Church, charity
(12) Amusement, carfares.
(13) Cash record
(14) Recapitulation

(2) Household Records:
a—Family sizes record (shoes, hosiery, gloves, etc.)
b—Clothes storage record
c—Linen record (number, cost, price and date of purchase). d—Preserve record
e—Pantry record.
f—Anniversary record.
g—Gift record.

(3) Library Records:
a—Poetry
b—Fiction.
c—History.
d—Reference
e—Books to read or to buy
f—Music, repertoire, lyric, humorous, sacred.
g—Music to buy

(4) Family Medical Record:

(8) General Inventory:
Subdivided for clothes, furniture, jewelry, silver, miscellaneous, etc.

Housework—the art as well as the science of home making—if followed out on an intelligent basis, is the most glorious career opened to any woman, and one which offers her widest talents their most varied scope.

War Devil Can Be Put to Flight by God of Love, Says Zangwill

By Israel Zangwill

I.

Copyright in the U. S. A. to the New York American.

Winston Churchill has more than once in phrases stamped with genius, expressed his sense of the folly and futility of the armaments which he is doomed to organize and amplify—against a practically equal counterweight on the opposition side. Nor is the other side backward in handsome acknowledgments of futility and folly. And yet, as in a ghastly trance, conscious of everything, but unable to stir hand or foot, the peoples of Europe see themselves slowly crushed under masses of iron and steel, annually growing more monstrous and gigantic.

When the twentieth century opened, England's naval expenditure was some thirty millions, it is now approaching fifty millions. Our education budget is just about one-fourth of our fighting budget. Civilization, like Laocoon, is strangling in the coils of serpents, but of serpents it has itself hatched from the precious eggs of pedigree cockatrices. Hitherto, these serpents, as in the Trojan legend, were two—a land serpent and a sea serpent. But we have now generated an air gryphon, direr than the chimaeras, whose breath was fire.

And while Laocoon strove to throttle his serpents, we are fatally compelled to fatten ours, to strengthen the sinister muscles that enfold us, to inject into the fangs the venom that beslaves us. Once a year, in a desperate effort to disentwine himself, Mr Churchill offers a truce, some reduction of armaments, a Sabbatical year. But it is a forlorn hope. Germany can no more disentangle herself than England. The workmen are engaged, the dockyards must be fed. Nations are made for navies, not navies for nations. Would you throw out of gear the great industry of Death—that staple of Life! Even as he waves the white flag, Mr. Churchill is constrained to cry, in the spirit of another fool of Fate: Build on—no bluff!
And damn'd be he, who first cries,
"Hold, enough!"

Were our drama alive, this mysterious modern Fate, impalpable and ineluctable, against whose invisible mesh our up-to-date Winston reels himself vainly beating, would have replaced the unreal movement of destiny in the Greek tragedies or the obsolete supernatural machinery of the Shakespearean theatre.

Imaginatively incarnated, this subtly-pervasive necessity would appear as a sort of war-devil, chuckling with grim humor as he watches the writhings of his minions and marionettes—statesmen primed with culture and christianity, their lips chanting the praises of peace, yet condemned by their mocking master to add brick after brick to the Temple of Apollyon and to build not God's kingdom on earth, but the devil's.

II.

The Peacemakers.

Blessed are the peacemakers, runs the war-devil's beatitude. But even his minions and marionettes must observe that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. Size is not safety. The nation whose 9,000 sea dogs, aided by the elements, scattered the 28,000 Spaniards of the Armada, should least of all put its faith in automatic arithmetic.

One would imagine that Germany and England could play the war game like cards, that Mr. Churchill could deal a destroyer and be trumped by a Zeppelin, that Admiral von Tirpitz could lay down a twenty-knot cruiser to be taken by a thirty-knot cruiser or that England has only to show a sufficient hand of super-dreadnoughts for Germany to cry, "I pass!" One Nelson may equal a dozen dreadnoughts. Yet I am not aware that the necessity of Nelsons, or of the brain power standard, exercises either the Admiralty or the music halls.

That poor little school boy who killed himself the other day because he was refused admission to the navy on the ground that he was short-sighted in one eye—how he reminds us that the Nelson of the Nile and Trafalgar had only one eye altogether! Never, said the principal of his college, had he given a boy "such a consummately admirable character!" Possibly and embryo Nelson—yet lost to the nation on the same automatic system. And where is this ever-evolving programme to stop? In a century we shall have, at this rate, some 500 warships—the majority, I suppose, Hyper-Ultra-Trans-Super Dreadnoughts. Who is to man them? Will Englishmen be all at sea, reverted to a race of sea rovers, like their Danish forefathers? But more possibly water ships will be as obsolete as stage coaches. Armageddon will be in the air (where, indeed, it has been since my childhood).

III.

Some War Teachings.

In this nightmare of civilization, two comforting theories have found eager ears. M. Bloch taught that war is now impossible, since it can only result in stalemate. Mr. Norman Angell teaches that war is economically unsound, that it cannot pay. But it would now seem that it is peace which is impossible; that it is peace which does not pay. Mr. Winston Churchill has told us there is no finality even in super-dreadnoughts, that each invention has barely the duration of a Lord Mayor, and that every year the perfections of last year must be scrapped; that there is not an item of equipment but has to be constantly revised, be it dockyard machinery or telegraphic apparatus, be it searchlights or torpedo tubes, range finders or gyro-compasses, or this new plague of airships. For the devil is a good paymaster and the cunningest brains in the world are at work in his smithies and laboratories, ever destroying the instruments of destruction by bettering them. Mr. Churchill did not mention the cost of casualties, or cite the chapter of accidents. Let some member of Parliament extract statistics of the damages of the last decade—the lights that failed, the engines that exploded, the destroyers that destroyed themselves, the cruisers that collided, the airships that foundered, the balloons that burst. So far from feeling that safety lies in numbers, I have horrid visions of congested ships under real war, jamming and ramming, the more the mazier.

Add the cost of the dress rehearsals of war, not merely the pageants and demonstrations, but the everyday practice. Every gun that goes off blows into smithereens the upkeep of a family. What we call peace is thus really a sort of Pankhurst-war, writ large, in which property is destroyed on a colossal scale, if not life. Were we, therefore, to follow the economic argument, I am not sure it would not lead us to wipe out the German navy at once, while it is still vincible, rather than face the annual destruction of scores of millions of money which Germany imposes upon us.

Israel Zangwill.

Which conclusion being clearly a suggestion of the War-Devil, it ensues that the Angel of Peace is not Norman. And verily the Angel of Peace is Hebrew, and Hebrew only. It is Isaiah with his great vision of brotherhood of toilers, it is Jesus with his quite scientific doctrine that whoso takes the sword shall perish by it. "And they shall beat their swords into plough-shares." This is the only scrapping that will be effective in the end—not of sword into super-sword, Dreadnought into Super-Dreadnought.

IV.

Yet Another Device

The War-Devil has yet another device. For the price of Peace is paid not only in hard cash but in honor. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom, but the fear of the War-Devil is the beginning of Madness.

Worse than war is the death of the soul of a people. For if there is a peace of God that passeth all understanding, there is a peace of the Devil which passeth all endurance. It is a peace purchased by sacrificing to security every high national ideal, every generous instinct. Such a peace we enjoy today.

The baleful shadow of Bismarck looms like a Brocken spectre over Europe, and in her terror England has thrown herself into the arms of Russia, sinking perforce to the level of her barbarian swain. And the more massive her armaments, the more mouse-like her action; the larger her dreadnoughts, the greater her dread. We have all the cost of greatness only no greatness. And the same subtle blight has spread over the bulk of Europe. Hampered by their coats of mail, the nations can scarcely move a finger.

The Balkan States rush in, where the Great Powers fear to tread, and, when at last United Europe nerves itself to demonstrate, it is against Montenegro! Here is the War-Devil's opportunity to whisper, Is Peace worth the price? What profits it to guard the husk of a people? It is in such moments that Christendom pants for Crusades, that Islam proclaims Jehads. Only by remembering there is no "Holy" War can we be on our guard against the War-Devil in this, his subtlest mood.

For who believes today that history's Holy Wars were indeed holy? The most righteous war may only end in bloodlust and earth-hunger as the latest war of Cross versus Crescent is ending. No, let us turn a deaf ear to the Devil, though he speak with the tongue of angels, demoralize Europe, let us find some other remedy than iron and blood.

V.

As to Arbitration.

The favorite alternative to armaments is arbitration. But even at The Hague let us beware lest the war-devil be not lulling and gulling us. Since The Hague conference was established some of the bloodiest wars in history have been fought. Outbuilt at sea, Germany takes to the air. France calls on her citizens for Napoleonic sacrifices. Nay, British colonies, long as languorous abodes of peace as Thomson's "Castle of Indolence," are now singing his "Rule Britannia" in ragtime: they have embraced conscription and are building battleships.

Pleasant as it is to recall the successes of The Hague, the ubiquitous peace bodies, the peace agreements and peace conventions, the peace congress and the peace celebrations, and the hundred and three economists now preparing erudite international essays out of the interest on Mr. Carnegie's two millions, let us not forget that four armament firms in Britain alone have a capital of twenty-three millions, on which interest must be earned.

And over the thin and intermittent pipings of peace crash the imperturbable hammers of the War Devil, fashioning his ships; the great furnaces roar, forging his cannons, the war drum beats, the trumpet blares, the kings go to their thrones to the sound of tramping soldiers—the great captains of industry, the chiefs of art and learning, thrust into the background, hidden away like poor relations.

So long as the War Devil dictates the very symbols of our civilization he will remain its master. So long as our conceptions remain radically unchanged, so long as no New World religion flames into being with a new, passionate sense of brotherhood and a new scale of human values, so long we shall cry Peace, Peace, where there is no peace.

Arbitration may be a palliative; the thought that the profit of war is a great illusion may give men pause, but neither of these conceptions goes to the root of the matter, and wherever men feel greatly or desire greatly they will accept no arbitrament but the sword's.

And it is Nationality, not gold, that is the prize of war—the enhanced communal consciousness of a group, with all its rich-dyed contributions to the web of human existence; and if Nationality is not worth the cost, or can be secured by more civilized frictions, or springs sufficiently from heredity and environment, let Nationality or its dependence on war be denounced as "the great illusion"—not the estimate of war's profits, which is not war's mainspring.

VI.

Why the Ungodly Laugh?

If the peace prophets cannot bring the millennium it is because they are usually purblind. Hence the laughter of the ungodly. Hell is paved with the solutions of the myopic. The true seer must first of all see. An analysis of arbitration shows that it leaves the facts of life out. It deals with the past. Life presses to the future. There is no reason on earth why England should, and Germany should not, enjoy the hegemony of the world—except that so it is. But there is equally no reason why it should remain so. By labor and sacrifice, by luck or cunning, it is always open to Germany to push England from her pride of place.

And everywhere in the New World new nations are being born, old breeds mingling, fresh life-forces surging. But arbitration supposes a closed world, a fixed world, the life-flood frozen suddenly when the first Hague Conference was founded. Its experts are engaged with musty documents, with faded maps, with forgotten records. Most of its problems are actually connected with boundaries.

If arbitration of this sort is to replace war, then the map of the world must remain eternally as it happened to be at the moment arbitration was invented. But endless ancient enmities seethe, endless aspirations and earth-hungers demand satisfaction, and if the world is not to be re-carved by the sword it must be re-adjusted by reason of love.

The learned lawyers cannot help us. Their precedents becloud the issue. The love of law must yield to the law of love. If Germany desires of our territory, she must have it. There is no reason other than the sword why Britain should possess nearly a fourth of the globe. No law of Sinai or Calvary laid it down that Australia or Egypt should be British. An all-red route means a route of blood. In her turn, Germany must give up Alsace and Lorraine, establish "the open door" in all her possessions. And so all round—over the whole field of politics.

Those who cannot endure the notion of freely surrendering territory or tariffs at the bidding of reason and love must cease to prate of peace. Between love and the sword there is no true third way.

Sir Harry Johnston has recently published a precious little volume, indicating from his rich concrete experience of men and cities, of civilizations and savageries, many historic grievances which the Powers could set right as simply as they could have removed the Balkan grievances without the Balkan bloodshed. Such a book is a primer of true arbitration, a first aid to statesmen. Without such an inner spirit the Palace of Peace is a whitewashed sepulchre. The War-Devil can only be conquered by the God of Love.

The Most Famous and Successful Criminal of Modern Times, Who Made a Million Dollars in Her Early Criminal Career and Lost It at Monte Carlo, and Has Now Accumulated Half a Million Dollars in Honorable Business Enterprises

Sophie Lyons

I WAS the wife of a bank burglar, Ned Lyons, as I have already said, and during the many years of my close connection with the more important robberies of America and Europe I came to know intimately the expert burglars of the world. I was the only woman during this time who not only was in the full confidence of these famous professionals but who also travelled with them and was usually assigned a part to play in the robberies.

My reputation was so well established in the Underworld that I was sought by many criminals who were not bank burglars, but who wanted a reliable partner in their own fields. Among these were several women who were extremely remarkable in their own special work. With some of these women I went into partnership, and, indeed, so clever were they that on more than one occasion they proved too clever for me and got the best of me in my dealings with them.

A business woman of moderate capacity can earn a fair living in a real estate office, or with various wholesale or manufacturing firms. Many women of more than usual capacity are earning $100 a week—here and there are women of conspicuous ability who make from $15,000 to $30,000 a year, and I know of a few who earn $50,000 and more.

Now the women I am dealing with on this page to-day were all exceptional women—every one of them a woman of undaunted courage, marvellous knowledge of human nature, quick resourcefulness, splendid executive ability and almost incredible powers of persuasion. With such an endowment of natural ability, who can set a limit for their success in honest fields of business?

And yet every one of these women, and many others whose exploits I have not the space to recount to-day, is now an outcast, has served a good share of her life in prison, is in poverty or has died poor. Surely, as I have asserted and hope to abundantly prove again and again—CRIME DOES NOT PAY!

This great truth forced itself upon me after many, many years of my profitless life in the Underworld. And my own life experience and my present little fortune of half a million dollars, all honestly acquired, have demonstrated that half the industry and ability that great criminals expend will return them richer and more enduring success in honest fields of endeavor.

SOPHIE LYONS

Some Remarkable Women With Whom I Was in Partnership

SOPHIE LYONS, bank president—can you imagine it? Strange as it may seem, I actually held such a position in New York City for several months and the experience proved one of the most surprising in my whole career.

Although this venture in high finance yielded me only a bare living and nearly landed me in a prison cell, it gave me a remarkable insight into the methods used by clever women to swindle the public and showed me how these women are able to carry through schemes which the most skillful men in the underworld would never dare undertake.

All this happened in the days before I had won the wide reputation which my crimes later gave me. I had come to New York with very little money and with no definite plans for getting any—my husband was serving a term in prison and I was temporarily alone and on my own resources.

Walking up Broadway one day I came face to face with Carrie Morse, a woman I knew by reputation as one of the most successful swindlers in the business. [illegible] of mine had often pointed her out to me, but we had never been introduced, and I had no idea that she knew me.

I was therefore greatly surprised when she stepped up to me and called me by name.

"Why, Sophie Lyons, how do you do?" she said with the well bred cordiality which was such an important part of her stock in trade. "Come in and have some tea with me."

As we entered a well known restaurant I noted with envious eyes the evidences of prosperity which Carrie flaunted. From the long ostrich plume which drooped from her Parisian hat to the shiny tips of her high heeled shoes, she was dressed in the height of fashion and expense. At her throat sparkled a valuable diamond brooch, and when she removed her gloves there flashed into view a princely array of rings, which made my own few jewels look quite cheap and insignificant.

We Plan to Start a Bank

And yet, except for this somewhat too lavish display of jewelry, there was nothing loud or overdressed about her. It was plain that she knew how to buy clothes, and her tall, well rounded figure set off her stylish garments admirably. In every detail—her well kept hands, her gentle voice, her superb complexion and the dainty way she had of wearing her mass of chestnut hair—she was the personification of luxury and refinement. As she looked that day Carrie Morse would have passed anywhere without the slightest question for the beautiful and cultured wife of some millionaire.

All these facts, which I took in at a glance, made me less inclined to question too closely the motives which had prompted her to hail me as an old friend when we had never had even a speaking acquaintance. Quite evidently she had lots of money or an unlimited line of credit. How did she get it? That was what I was curious to find out. I made up my mind that I would be just as nice to her as I knew how, hoping that I might learn from her a new and easy road to wealth.

By the time our tea was served we were chatting away like old friends.

"Sophie," she said, "I'm going to take you into my confidence and help you make a lot of money. You and I will start a bank."

"You mean rob a bank, don't you?" I said, not quite able to believe my ears.

"I mean nothing of the sort," she said, setting down her tea cup with a thump. "You and I will start a bank. It will be a bank for ladies only. Any woman who has a little money saved up can come to us for advice. We will take her money and show her where she can invest it so that she will get more interest than she could in any other way."

"But I don't know anything about running a bank," I protested. "I'm Ned Lyons's wife—he and I are bank robbers, not bank owners."

"That's all right," she reassured me. "It's not necessary for you to know any thing about running banks in order to hold the position I have in mind. All you have to do is to follow my instructions and you'll soon be wearing as many diamonds as I am."

A half hour before I should have thought it the height of absurdity for any one to suggest my engaging in a wild cat banking scheme with Carrie Morse. Yet now I sat spellbound by her magnetic power—patiently listening to details which were all Greek to me and getting from every word she uttered renewed confidence in the reality of the financial castles in the air which were to make us both millionaires.

What a business woman Carrie Morse would have made! With her personal charms, her eloquence and her quick ingenuity, she had no need to depend on crime for a living—she could have accumulated a fortune in any legitimate line of work.

I Enter "High Finance"

The upshot of it all was that I agreed heart and soul to Carrie Morse's plans for taking a short cut to fortune. First she had excited my avarice by her stories of the ease with which money could be made—then she dazed me by her apparent familiarity with the intricacies of finance. At last I became as credulous as any farmer is when he comes to the city to exchange a few hard earned dollars for ten times their value in green goods.

I accompanied Carrie to the door of her hotel. The fact that she was staying at the fashionable Brunswick, while I was finding it hard work to raise the price of a room at a modest hotel farther down town, proved another argument in favor of my following the leadership of my new found friend.

"Meet me at 9 o'clock to-morrow," Carrie had said, "at No. —— West Twenty-third street." I was on hand a few minutes before the appointed hour. The address she had given me was a three-story brown stone front house just beyond the business section of the street. But I was barely able to see it through the clouds of mortar dust raised by a gang of workmen who were busily engaged in tearing out the whole front of the building.

"Yes, this is No. ——," said one of the workmen to whom I addressed a rather startled inquiry. "We're making it over into offices." I was convinced that I had made a mistake in the address and was just on the point of turning away when I saw Carrie Morse coming down the steps.

"Good morning," she called cheerily. "This is the new bank—or rather it will be when these workmen get it finished. And you, my dear, are no longer Sophie Lyons, but Mrs. Celia Rigsby, the president of this rich and prosperous institution for the amelioration of the finances of the women of New York."

"But," I said, beginning now for the first time to feel some doubts about the undertaking in which I had so suddenly embarked, "where is all the money coming from to start this bank?"

"Money," said Carrie, lowering her voice to a hoarse whisper. "Don't speak of that so loud—the workmen might hear you. I've leased this house and I'm having all these alterations made on credit. I haven't a cent to my name—that's why I'm starting this bank. I need money and this is the easiest way I know to make it."

Carrie's easy confidence allayed most of my fears and I forgot the rest when from some mysterious source she produced money enough to support me in comparative luxury during the ten days we had to wait for the bank to be completed. She insisted that there was absolutely nothing for me to do in the meantime and that she didn't want to see me in Twenty-third street until the bank was ready for business.

I was hardly prepared for the surprises which I found when I visited the bank on the appointed day. Over the entrance hung a huge brass sign reading, "New York Women's Banking and Investment Company." The entire front of the building had been remodelled into a commodious and up-to-date counting room. It was lighted by two large plate glass windows and the entrance was through a massive door whose glass was protected by heavy bars. These bars looked for all the world like iron, but Carrie assured me that they were only wood covered with tin and painted black.

Inside were all the appurtenances of a first-class banking establishment—brass railings, desks, counters, chairs and in the most conspicuous position an enormous "burglar proof" safe. In the rear were partitioned off two little private offices, their doors labelled "Mrs. Celia Rigsby, President" and "Mrs. C. Morse, General Manager."

All this quite took my breath away, but what impressed me most of all was the sight of a half dozen old graybeards who were busily engaged on some bulky account books. Not one of these men could have been less than sixty years old and all were of venerable aspect, with spectacles, white hair and long white beards.

"Why do you hire such old men?" I asked Carrie at the first opportunity. "And where do you get the money to pay all of them?"

"S-s-sh!" she whispered. "Don't you know there's nothing that inspires people's confidence like old men? Many people who would never trust their money to a young, active man, will gladly hand it over to an old venerable appearing fellow. And the next best thing to an old man is a pretty woman—that's why I think you and I shall make such a success of this business. As for paying these old men, they don't get a cent. They are all working for nothing in the hope of getting a chance to invest some money in the business."

How We Fooled the Public

I was so impressed by these fresh evidences of Carrie's business ability and my own ignorance, that I felt quite relieved when she informed me that I would not have to remain at the bank, but would fulfil my duties as president at some apartments she had taken for me in a fashionable quarter of Fifth avenue. These apartments were furnished in splendid style and Carrie handed me a roll of bills with which to purchase some gowns that would be in keeping with my new home.

After my wardrobe was purchased and my trunks moved over from the hotel, I was not long in learning just what Carrie expected of me. She began inserting advertisements in all the leading newspapers offering "widows and other women of means," investments which were "guaranteed to net them from 15 to 20 per cent. on their money."

When women called in answer to the advertisement at the bank on Twenty-third street, many of them would want more evidence than Carrie could supply before they would part with their money. These doubting ones were referred to me—Mrs. Celia Rigsby, if you please, who had made a fortune by investing her late husband's $1,500 insurance money in the securities offered by the Women's Banking and Investment Company.

The advertisements were kept going in the newspapers, and more and more women kept coming to the bank on Twenty-third street. Mrs. Morse received them all, talked many of them into paying their money with her right then and there, and to those who had misgivings she said sweetly:

"But I would rather you would not be influenced by anything I have said. It is your duty to yourself to investigate and assure yourself as to just what profits we are really paying on investments. Perhaps you would like to see and talk with one of our customers who has done so well with our investments that she has taken an interest in our bank. I'm sure you'd be interested in talking with Mrs. Rigsby."

The style in which I lived on Fifth avenue left no doubt of my wealth, and with Carrie's help I soon had a glib and convincing story to tell of my previous [illegible] I had taken [illegible] I took no [illegible] part [illegible] I allowed the [illegible] mitted Mrs. Morse to refer prospective investors to me merely because I was so well satisfied with the way my own investment had turned out and felt a [illegible] desire to share my good fortune with other women.

Business increased rapidly and greater crowds of women came in reply to my partner's glowing advertisements. Many of them would hand over their money right away in exchange for a handful of the crinkly stock certificates which filled a whole room in the rear of the bank. These certificates were printed in all the colors of the rainbow, for, as Carrie naively explained, "some of the ladies prefer green, some blue, some black and so on."

Carrie was jubilant. She kept me liberally supplied with money for clothes and the heavy expenses of my apartment, but when I asked her about a further share of the profits she said:

"Sophie, you're as ignorant as a new born babe of business methods. It's always customary to leave all the money in a new business until the end of six months. Then we'll divide what we've made, turn the bank over to some one else and go to Europe for a long rest."

I had my doubts about the truth of this, but as I was making a good living with little effort and had nothing better in sight just then, I determined to continue under Carrie's leadership. She continually reassured me by insisting that what we were doing was just as legitimate as any business and that there was nothing in it for which the police could take us to task.

Although I foolishly had confidence in Carrie's ability to keep out of trouble, I did not for a minute believe that the securities she was selling were worth the paper they were printed on. Still, as most of the women who called to see me seemed to be persons of means who could well afford to contribute toward our support, I did not feel any serious compunctions at advising them to invest. It seemed no worse than picking a rich man's pocket or robbing a wealthy bank—and it was not half so difficult or so hazardous to life and liberty.

Our Banking Bubble Bursts

One day, however, something happened that filled me with honest indignation at Carrie Morse and her schemes. A poor, bent old widow called to see me—a woman whose threadbare clothes and rough hands plainly showed how she had to struggle to make a living. Tied up in her handkerchief she had $600 which she had just drawn from a savings bank.

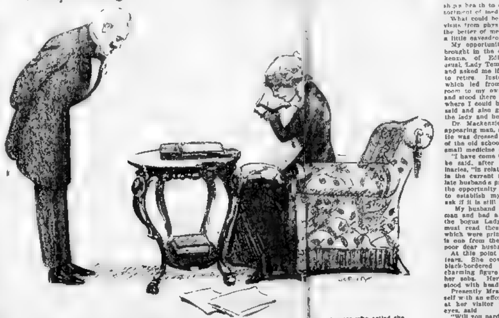
"It's all I have in the world," she said with tears in her eyes, "and I've had to scrimp and slave for every cent of it. I saw Mrs. Morse's advertisements and I've been to see her this morning. She says if I'll give my money to her she can double it for me in two years. Would I better do it? I'm only a poor old woman and I want you to give me your advice."

As diplomatically as I could I explained to her that while Mrs. Morse's scheme was an excellent one, it would be much wiser for a woman in her circumstances to keep her money in the savings bank, and I made her promise that she would put it back there at once. Then I put on my hat and coat and hurried over to the bank to see Carrie Morse.

As usual Carrie was in the midst of an enthusiastic description of her stocks while a long line of women anxiously awaited their turn with her. I took her by the arm, led her into one of the private offices and shut the door.

"Carrie Morse, this sort of business has got to stop," I said with all the emphasis I could. "I'm willing to help you swindle women who can afford to lose the money, but I positively will not have any part in taking the bread out of the mouths of poor widows like the one you just sent over to see me. Sooner than do that I'll starve—or go back to robbing banks or picking pockets."

Masquerading as the Widow of a Disting ished Physician.



It was in Nice that I met Mrs. Gardner, the famous English confidence woman, and I did not then know of the custom in England which the doctors have of selling their practice. I soon found that a very distinguished English physician, Sir Edward Temple, had died, and that Mrs. Gardner was masquerading as his widow. In deepest mourning this bogus "Lady Temple" had advertised the dead physician's practice for sale for $25,000. She had come to Italy, as far removed from London as possible, so as to avoid detection, and was industriously selling over and over again her supposed late husband's famous practice.

To one of her prosp customers who called she said: "My husband was a distinguished man, and had a very lucrative pract You must read these notices in the papers which w rinted when he died. Here is one from the Londo imes—oh! my poor dear husband!"—

At this point Mrs. ner burst into tears. She covered her face with ack-bordered handkerchief, and her charming fig ook convulsively with her sobs. Her visitor, D ackenzie, stood with head bowed in silent respec

For several weeks things went on as before. Then one day I chanced to meet the poor widow who had so excited my sympathies. I was [illegible] forgotten her promise [illegible] and I set out at once [illegible] an explanation. As I was approaching the bank my attention was attracted by [illegible] excitement just outside the entrance.

Mrs. Gardner was a woman of fine presence, a finely modulated voice, all the manners, graces and charms of a well-bred English woman and an amazingly inspiring and persuasive conversationalist.

In daring and ingenuity this remarkable woman surpassed any man I ever knew. Crimes which the cleverest men in the underworld would have declared impossible or too foolhardy to undertake she not only attempted, but carried through to success.

For years the boldest schemes followed one another in rapid succession from Mrs. Gardner's fertile brain. Swindling was as natural to her as breathing is to normal persons. She was the most successful confidence woman who ever operated in England or on the Continent, and no rich man was safe once she got her [illegible] for him.

I first met Mrs. Gardner in Nice, where I was enjoying a little vacation after a long arduous bank-robbing [illegible] in America. She was then traveling under the name of Lady Temple.

To make a long story short, we soon became great friends. We [illegible] together and she generously shared with me the luxuries with which she was so plentifully supplied. She finally [illegible] duced me to take rooms in the hotel adjoining her own suite.

I did not know at that time that she was Mrs. Gardner, the famous English confidence swindler.

She told me little of her personal affairs except that her husband, Sir Edward Temple, had been a prominent physician in London and that she was in Nice to recover from the shock incident to his sudden death. The deep mourning she habitually wore and the heavy black band on her visiting cards bore out this story, but, to tell the truth, I did not bother my head much about its truth or falsity.

I did not at that time happen to know that it is the custom in England for a doctor's practice to be sold when he retires from business or dies.

There was no doubt that she had money and that she was giving me a liberal share of its benefits—why should I worry about where it came from or how long it would last?

I in turn kept her in equal ignorance of my own past life and of my means of support.

But there was one thing about which I couldn't help being very curious—the number of doctors who were calling at the hotel to see Lady Temple. Every day there was at least one and some days there were three or four—each came [illegible] the same one seldom appeared a second time.

Mrs. Gardner's Clever Sche[illegible]

Lady Temple invariably saw all of them. When a physician's card came up she would ask me to retire to my own rooms and then would be closeted for a long time with the visitor. It could not be professional calls these doctors were making, for there was nothing about her ladyship's health to call for such a varied assortment of medical attention.

What could be the meaning of all these visits from physicians? My curiosity got the better of me and I determined to do a little eavesdropping.

My opportunity came when the maid brought in the card of "Dr. Robert Mackenzie, of Edinburgh, Scotland." As usual, Lady Temple said, "Show him up," and asked me if I would be good enough to retire. Instead of closing the door which led from Lady Temple's sitting room to my own, I left it open a trifle and stood there with my ear to the crack, where I could hear every word that was said and also get an occasional peep at the lady and her visitor.

Dr. Mackenzie was a grave, pompous appearing man, slightly under middle age. He was dressed in the conventional garb of the old school physician and carried a small medicine case.

"I have come to see you, Lady Temple," he said, after the usual polite preliminaries, "in relation to your advertisement in the current number of Lancet. Your late husband's practise seems to offer just the opportunity I have long been seeking to establish myself in London. May I ask if it is still for sale?"

"My husband was a very distinguished man and had a very lucrative practice," the bogus Lady Temple replied. "You must read these notices in the papers which were printed when he died. Here is one from the London Times—oh! my poor dear husband!"

Presently Mrs. Gardner recovered herself with an effort and, gazing appealingly at her visitor through her tear-stained eyes, said:

"Will you pardon me? I know it is very weak of me to give way to my grief like this.

"As I was saying," she finally resumed, "my husband was so dear to me that I cannot bear to think of living in London now he is gone. That is why I am anxious to dispose of my interests there at once. Did you know the late Sir Edward, doctor?"

"I never had the honor of his acquaintance, but I have often heard him lecture, and I have in my library all the books he ever published. I was always a great admirer of his abilities. His discoveries about the circulation of the blood seem to me the most valuable recent contribution to medical science."

"It pleases me to have you say that," said Lady Temple, warming into cordiality at this tribute to her late husband. "I have had many good offers for the practise, but none so far from a man such as my husband would have wished to see succeed him. You are a man after Sir Edward's own heart, and if you can furnish satisfactory references I feel confident matters can be arranged to our mutual satisfaction."

From an inner pocket the doctor produced a packet of letters which he carefully unfolded and handed to Lady Temple.

"Very, very satisfactory," she murmured after studying them intently. "If my husband were here he would be so gratified to see what an able successor I have found for him. And now as to terms."

The doctor did not seem at all disturbed by this abrupt introduction of monetary considerations. Indeed he was growing quite merry under the warming influence of her ladyship's bright smiles. Those smiles, by the way, were all the more effective because of their background of widow's weeds and tear-stained cheeks.

"Then I may really have the practice?" he asked eagerly.

"Indeed you may," Lady Temple replied. "The price is $25,000, but I do not wish to accept that amount or sign the final papers until I get back to London. My solicitors, however, say it will be [illegible] necessary to give you an option, [illegible] provided you are willing to pay a small amount on the purchase price—say $1,000. Is that agreeable, doctor?"

Agreeable? Indeed it was!

Swindling One Doctor a Day

The doctor counted out $1,000 in crisp bank notes. Her ladyship produced two copies of an agreement which, she said, her solicitors had prepared and these they both signed. Then she bade the departing doctor an almost affectionate farewell and gave him the most minute directions about meeting her in London a month later.

The next day I overheard an almost similar interview with a doctor from Glasgow! The only point of difference was that he paid $1,200 for the option instead of $1,000.

There was no necessity for further eavesdropping. I understood now why Lady Temple read all the medical papers and why so many doctors came to see her. No wonder we lived in luxury with some ambitious doctor contributing at least $1,000 every day to our support!

I said nothing of what I had seen or heard and, although I continued to live with Lady Temple for several months, she never explained her affairs with the doctors. This seems to be a characteristic of all women swindlers—to deceive even their closest friends and never to tell any one the whole truth about their nefarious schemes.

It was from others that I later learned the complete details of this swindle. There really had been a Sir Edward Temple, who was a great London physician.

Mrs. Gardner, learning of his death from the newspapers, familiarized herself with his career from the obituary notices, secured some photographs of him and began posing as his widow.

Her advertisements in the medical journals did not mention Sir Edward by name but it was to be inferred that the practice offered for sale was his because of his recent death and because the announcements were signed "Lady Temple."

Doctors interested were invited to write her at a post office box address. She replied from Nice, where she had "gone for her health," and invited them to come there and see her. What happened to the unfortunate doctors who made the trip I have already told you.

The supply of physicians willing to pay for an option on a London practice seemed inexhaustible and in a few weeks my friend must easily have cleared $20,000. But she began to tire of Nice and invited me to accompany her to London.

When we reached there we went to Claridge's, in Mayfair, and took one of the finest suites in that exclusive hotel. The morning after our arrival she suggested a shopping expedition.

To my amazement there stood at the hotel door waiting for us a splendid carriage drawn by a prancing pair of horses in heavy silver-plated harness.

On the doors of the carriage was emblazoned a brilliant coat of arms. On the box sat a pompous coachman in livery. A liveried footman stood at attention ready to assist us.

I had hard work to believe it wasn't all a dream as I settled back against the soft silken cushions and heard my friend order us driven to Bond street.

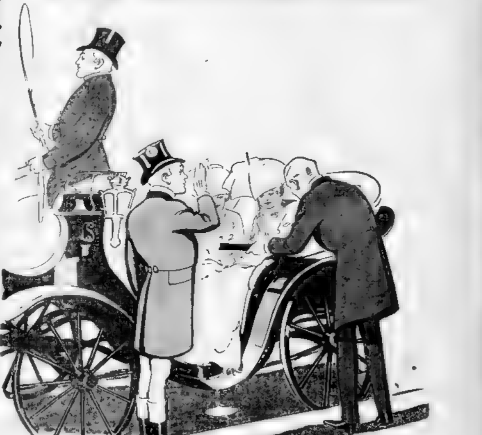
We stopped in front of a famous jewelry store—I made ready to alight but that, it seems, was not the plan. Instead her ladyship whispered a message to the footman and he went into the store.

Out came the proprietor, a dignified old Englishman. At sight of this splendid equipage with its crests on the door and the two fine ladies inside, he was all bows and smiles.

"It is not customary," he said rubbing his hands in gleeful anticipation of big sales to come, "to let our trays of diamonds go out of the store, but I shall be glad to arrange it for your ladyship."

WOMEN CRIMINALS OF EXTRAORDINARY ABILITY, Who Have Accomplished Astonishing Robberies Which the Most Skilful Men in the Underworld Would Never Think of Attempting

How the Big London and Paris Jewellers Were Robbed.



With her pocket fattened by the proceeds of her swindles in Nice and Monte Carlo, Mrs. Gardner planned a campaign against the big jewelry shops of Paris and London. I was elaborately gowned, hatted and bejewelled to play the part of her enormously rich American aunt.

Mrs. Gardner engaged the best suite of rooms at the most fashionable hotel in London and hired a two-horse brougham, a coupe and a landau, on all of which vehicles she had a crest and monogram painted. She hired a footman and a groom and togged them out in livery.

The horses' harnesses were silver-mounted, with coats-of-arms.

To inspire confidence and to impress the poor clerks we day after day drove to the shops in our various equipages, but did not often enter them. It was our habit to send in our liveried groom to say that the ladies would like to see that diamond necklace once more—would the clerk bring it out to the carriage just a moment? Our scheme was to impress the jewellers with our evidences of great wealth; and soon we had the shops sending their most valuable jewels by wholesale to our hotel apartments and begging permission to leave them for us "to consider."

A clerk appeared carrying two trays full of diamond necklaces, rings and other jewelry which Lady Temple had asked to see.

"Have you nothing better than these?" said Lady Temple, rather contemptuously, after a casual glance at them.

The eager clerk hurried back to the store and returned with a tray of more elaborate specimens of the jeweler's art. Lady Temple leisurely selected a necklace, two rings and a locket—worth in all more than $5,000.

"Send these to Lady Temple's apartments at Claridge's," she said, "and include them in my bill the first of next month. Doubtless you knew my dear husband, the late Sir Edward"—her voice caught as it always did when she spoke his name—"he had an account here for years."

Our Experience in London

The clerk smirked his gratitude, promised prompt delivery and we drove on to a fashionable dressmaker's. There we secured on credit, which had nothing more substantial for its basis than the stolen crest our hired carriage bore, several costly gowns.

This sort of thing went on for two weeks. The magic of my friend's methods opened to us all the treasures of London's finest shops. A never-ending line of messengers brought to Claridge's the most expensive goods of every description—and not a penny of real money was involved in any of the transactions.

I discarded all my old gowns and had to get additional trunks to hold the new ones. Soon I had accumulated three or four times as much jewelry as I could wear at one time. With the prudence for which I was always famous, I put the surplus rings and brooches in a safe deposit box.

All this time you may be sure I felt considerable apprehension. Although I took no active part in these swindling operations, I shared in the plunder and knew I would be held as an accomplice in case there was trouble.

The trouble came sooner than I expected. We had been "buying" some baubles—making our selections as usual without leaving our carriage. Just as we were about to drive away the clerk who had taken our order came rushing out.

"Your ladyship's pardon," he stammered, "but would you please step inside the store. The manager thinks there's some mistake—that is, he thought Lady Temple was in Egypt."

I gave a gasp—now we'd be arrested! But my friend showed not the slightest emotion except a little annoyance such as was quite natural under the circumstances to a lady of rank. She calmly walked into the store—and I have never laid eyes on her since.

After waiting an hour I decided she must have escaped by a side entrance. I returned to Claridge's and found she had been there before me. She was gone, bag and baggage—and in a great hurry, as the disorder of the rooms showed.

I lost no time in arranging my own departure and I did not feel safe until I was well on my way to New York with my trunks full of more finery than I had ever possessed.

Two or three years later Helen Gardner, alias Lady Temple, was convicted in France for obtaining money under false pretenses. Her prison term brought her to her senses—showed her how foolish it was to waste her life in crime. When she was released, she settled down to an honest career and later became the wife of a prosperous merchant.

The account of my experiences with famous women swindlers would not be complete without some mention of the greatest of them all—the notorious Ellen Peck, long known as the 'Confidence Queen.'

Mrs. Peck's exploits during the many years when she defrauded everybody who came within her reach, would fill a book. One swindle would hardly be finished before another would be begun, and often she would have several entirely different schemes under way at once.

She paid her lawyers several fortunes in her persistent efforts to keep out of jail and to retain possession of the property she had stolen. At one time, when she was in her prime, she was defendant in twenty-eight civil and criminal suits.

One of Ellen Peck's many peculiarities was her fondness for practicing her skilful arts on her fellow criminals. She found more satisfaction in cheating a thief out of a ten dollar bill than in defrauding some banker of $1,000.

Even I, trained in crime from childhood, was not proof against Ellen's wiles. Several times I became her victim as completely as I did Carrie Morse's, and I can vouch for the fact that no shrewder fox ever lived.

Each time she tricked me I would make a solemn vow never to have anything to do with her again. Then along she would come with some story, oh, so plausible!—and I would swallow it as readily as I had the previous one and as much to my sorrow.

Once she actually cheated me out of the very shawl on my back. It was a fine cashmere shawl—one I had secured in Europe at a great bargain.

"Come," said Ellen, "let me have that shawl. I know a rich woman who will give you $500 for it."

"No," I said, firmly, "I don't want to sell it." But Ellen turned her hypnotic eye on me, began her irresistible flow of smooth argument and—got the shawl!

That was the last I saw of her for six months. When I did succeed in running her down she said she had been [illegible] to get only $100 for the shawl—and she had left that at home on the sideboard!

Grabbing her by the arm I told her I would not let her go until she gave me what money she had. [illegible] argument she emptied $37.50 out of her purse—which was all I ever got for [illegible] $500 shawl.

Ellen Peck conceived a very simple scheme of piano swindling, and I was in partnership with her in it. She had been working this swindle alone until she had become known to all the piano dealers. Then she invited me to join her. Here is how we managed it:

I would go to a store and buy a piano on the installment plan, paying five or ten dollars down. The instrument would be delivered at some one of the twenty furnished rooms which Ellen had engaged for just this purpose in various parts of the city.

As soon as the piano was installed at one of these rooms we would promptly advertise it for sale at a greatly reduced price. If the first purchaser did not move the piano at once we would sometimes be able to sell the same instrument to five or six different persons. When we had squeezed as much money as we could out of a piano we would disappear—only to repeat the same trick at another furnished room and with a piano from another store.

It sometimes happened that when the several persons to whom we had sold a single piano came to claim it the merchant from whom we had secured it and to whom it still belonged would also put in an appearance. Then there would be the liveliest kind of a squabble, which would have to be settled in the courts.

Crafty Ellen Peck supplied the brains for this enterprise but made me do most of the hard work and gave me only a meagre share of the profits. It was a despicable swindle, for the loss did not fall on the dealer but on the poor families to whom we sold the pianos and who could ill afford the money we took from them. I am thankful to say that I did not long make my living in this mean way.

I hope that Ellen Peck may be alive to read these lines. In her declining years wisdom and charity have doubtless come to her just as they have to me. I feel sure that she shares my sincere repentance for past errors, and that she will give me her hearty indorsement when I say, as I constantly do, that under no circumstances does crime pay.

Plays Scheduled for Boston Theatres

The Old and the New on This Week's List

Tremont Theatre.

For their final week of their stay at the Tremont the Aborn English Grand Opera Company will give two operas. The regular six nights and the Wednesday and Saturday matinee will be devoted to Donizetti's melodies, "Lucia di Lammermoor," and there will be two extra matinees on Tuesday and Friday of Humperdinck's fairy opera, "Hansel and Gretel." "Lucia" is one of the established favorites among the popular classics. The romantic story of "Lucia" is taken from Scott's novel, "The Bride of Lammermoor," and its many familiar gems, such as the famous sextet, the mad scene, the soprano solo, "Silence O'er All," the soprano and tenor duet, "By My Father's Tomb," and its many other numbers, are familiar to all.

"Hansel and Gretel," with its many tuneful and simple folk songs of German origin, to which Humperdinck has added his own melodies and scholarly orchestration, will be given at the extra matinees on Tuesday and Friday afternoons. These matinees will start an hour later than the usual time, namely at 3:15.

Castle Square Theatre.

"The Wife" is a play with an established reputation, and its revival at the Castle Square on Monday is certain to arouse no little interest. It is a strong emotional drama written by David Belasco in collaboration with Henry C. De Mille, and it was one of the first of the numerous Belasco successes. It was first produced by the old Lyceum Theatre stock company of New York, and it was the very earliest of all the many Castle Square successes. The cast of "The Wife" in Mr. Craig's revival at the Castle Square will be a strong one. Mr. Craig himself will appear as John Rutherford, and in the title role of Mrs. Rutherford he will introduce Miss Mary Keener to the Boston theatregoing public. She will then make her first appearance as a member of the Castle Square company. William P. Carleton will be seen as Robert Grey, and other important roles will be held by Donald Meek, Laurett Browne, Florence Shirley and Mabel Colcord.

Plymouth Theatre.

Miss Horniman's company of Manchester Players will begin the last week of their engagement in this city at the Plymouth Theatre tomorrow. These players, like the Irish Players, work in unity, with the sole purpose of giving an artistic and finely balanced performance. The program for the coming week will include five different plays. For Monday, Thursday, Saturday nights and Saturday matinee the bill will include Bernard Shaw's "Candida" and Gilbert Cannan's "Miles Dixon." The former piece scored a big success in this country several years ago. On Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday nights and Wednesday matinee, John Masefield's "The Tragedy of Nan" and Gertrude Robbins' "Makeshifts" will be the offering. On Thursday matinee the presentation will be Sheridan's "The School for Scandal."

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

A long bill of features, all but one new to Boston audiences, is announced for B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. It will be headed by Lulu McConnell and Grant Simpson in Herbert Hall Winslow's comedy, "The Right Girl." This is by far the most amusing comedy seen in vaudeville in many a day. James and Bonnie Thornton, two of the best known entertainers of the old variety days, will make their first appearance in Boston in years at B. F. Keith's Theatre with a new act; and other features new to Boston audiences will be P. O'Malley Jennings and Edna Dorman, the English Johnny and the American girl, Ray Conlin, the ventriloquist from the West, Manning, Moore and Rourke, three lively rathskeller entertainers; and Du Callon, the English sailor.

Globe Theatre.

The Morton Jewell troupe of juggling songsters will head the Globe program for the coming week, but there will be many other interesting features. Lora will mystify her audiences with her remarkable second sight; the Jules Levy family of real instrumentalists; Dean and Sibley, Boston favorites, will return for a special week's engagement; Mitchell brothers, the knockabout comedians; the three Xylos, in a novel dancing and instrumental act; Carl and his dogs; Mabel Hettaw, the singing comedienne, and Black and Austin will be included in the bill. The picture section will be headed by the Pathe Weekly. On Thursday evening, after 7 o'clock, the entire house has been sold to the Owl Patrol Club.

Shubert Theatre.

Again has Trentini scored, this time in her new comedy opera, "The Firefly," which is filling the Shubert Theatre at every performance with enthusiastic audiences. Good things, however, like everything else, only has its days, hence the announcement that the final two weeks of the Trentini season in Boston will begin with tomorrow evening's performance.

The Trentini supporting company ranks first in its quality of comedians and singers, which include Roy Atwell, Audrey Maple, Melville Stewart, Katherine Stewart, Craig Campbell, Ruby Norton, Sammy Lee, William Wolff and Vera De Rosa.

National Theatre.

Commencing tomorrow the National will offer musical comedy as a diversion for the Summer, and the fact that Cohan & Harris stand as sponsors for the companies that will appear at the big South End theatre is sufficient guarantee that nothing will be left undone to make the season a highly successful one. For the first week "It Happened in New York" will be presented and all the Cohanesque features that combined to make the funfest so successful during its season on the road are retained as well as some new ideas which have been written into the book by that prince of American comedians, George M. Cohan.

Park Theatre.

"The Blindness of Virtue," Cosmo Hamilton's newest play, will be produced under the direction of William Morris at the Park Theatre tomorrow. This play, as presented at the Little Theatre in London, was seen later at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre in New York, and comes to Boston after a fifteen weeks' run at the Studebaker Theatre, Chicago.

SOME of the real headliners who are to appear before theatregoers of Boston during the week

FLORENCE COUGHLAN AT THE TREMONT

F. W. HOCHSTETTER WHOSE NEW COLOR PICTURES ARE AT THE TREMONT THEATRE

CHRISTIE LAWS AT THE PLYMOUTH

LOUISE LEVY AT THE GLOBE.

MACLYN ARBUCKLE. AT THE BOSTON.

Although it is a comedy and has comedy treatment, the play presents a serious subject and drives at the ignorance and neglect of parents who fail to instruct their daughters at the proper time of impulses which enter seriously into their lives.

The company presenting Mr. Hamilton's drama is an English one and comes from London's Little Theatre and includes in its cast the players who first presented it abroad.

Gaiety Theatre.

Bob Manchester's "Cracker Jacks" will be here for a week's stay at the Gaiety and it is needless to say that whenever this aggregation comes to town there is always something doing from the fact that the "Cracker Jacks" will present a clean-cut, wholesome and up-to-date show. The show opens with a melange, "A Garden of Affinities," introducing Johnny Jess, the Irish wit; James Coglan, Harris and Mack, Dan Riley, Wm. Sisto and others equally bright and clever. The specialties will introduce Beatrice Harlow, the Missouri Magnet; Coglan and Mack, a pair of real fellows, in a military absurdity, "The New Recruit," and Niblo and Riley in a comedy bit, "Studies in Black and Tan."

Boston Theatre.

One week more of gatling guns, Apaches, bucking bronchos and cowboy romance remains at the Boston Theatre, before Maclyn Arbuckle in "The Round Up" completes its sixth and last week in Boston. The great asset of "The Round Up" is that it makes no pretense of being other than a glorified melodrama; a rousing, flesh-and-blood series of bad scrapes, with that violent action which Americans like to attribute to their favorites in fiction.

Orpheum Theatre.

Rita Gould, who bills herself "The Lina Cavalieri of Vaudeville," will present a high-class singing act at the Orpheum tomorrow. Another head-line feature will be Sammy Watson's farmyard, presenting a unique animal act in vaudeville.

St. James Theatre.

The head-line act at the St. James Theatre for this week will be the Thomas J. Ryan-Ritchfield Company in a comedy Irish sketch, "Mag Haggerty's Father." A new selection of pictures will be exhibited. It is announced that on Thursday Rita Gould will appear.

Majestic Theatre.

In "The Bird of Paradise," entering upon its second week at the Majestic Theatre, there is a touch of the melodramatic, some of the spectacular and no end of mysticism and superstition. The play is proving one of the sensational dramatic offerings of the season. The story deals with an American doctor who stops off at the Hawaiian Islands on his way to execute a philanthropic mission. He meets Luana, a beautiful Hawaiian girl, marries her, forgets his mission and lives a life of indolence.

Howard Athenaeum.

"The Progressive" Burlesquers will be found at the Old Howard this week in a merry carnival of humor. This company is well equipped with pretty girls. The show is continuous.

Scenic Temple.

Special feature films are being offered as extra attractions at the Scenic Temple. These special subjects have a distinct educative aim as well as being otherwise interesting.

Colonial Theatre.

The popularity of "The Chocolate Soldier," which starts on its third week tomorrow night at the Colonial Theatre, is due to the fact that it is a radical contrast to the musical productions so common on the stage, in which a single song is relied upon to offset a hundred other defects of libretto and score. It is a pure and rare specimen of comic opera.

Luce-Finestone Benefit.

By the courtesy of the Messrs. Shubert and Arthur Hammerstein, the performance of Trentini in "The Firefly" at the Shubert Theatre on Monday evening, May 5, is tendered as a testimonial benefit to David Finestone, business manager and treasurer of the Shubert Theatre, and to John W. Luce, press representative of the Shubert and Majestic Theatres.

Waldron's Casino.

What is considered one of the best musical offerings in the line of extravaganza will appear in the garb of "Social Maids" at Waldron's Casino during the week. It is one of the famous Hurtig shows.

Grand Opera House.

"The Smart Set," with S. H. Dudley, will be found at the Grand Opera House this week. The show is entitled "Dr. Beans from Boston."

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Captain Huling's educated seals will be the feature at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week. Thursday night the amateurs will appear.

SHOWS TO DRAW BIG AUDIENCES

Attractions That Entertain on Bill for Next Six Days.

"The Magic Rose."

The first step in the movement to establish permanently in this city plays for children will take place Tuesday afternoon at the Plymouth Theatre, when Susan Thayer Bowker's poetic fairy play "The Magic Rose" will be presented by Clara Barteaux' Plays for Children company. The object of these plays is that the child, early in life, may become conversant with good drama, music and artistic dancing. Miss Bowker, the author of "The Magic Rose" and other plays which are to be produced for children, is a member of the old Boston Thayer family, which has for so many generations been identified with Boston traditions. She is a Radcliffe girl, and was formerly a student in the dramatic course conducted by Professor Baker.

Lothian's Testimonial.

Music lovers will be sure to pack the Colonial Theatre to the doors on the evening of May 4, for on that evening, when Napier Lothian, the veteran musical director of this city, celebrates his seventy-seventh birthday, he will be given a deserved testimonial. For more than forty years he wielded the baton for the musicians at the Boston Theatre, and he has always stood for the best and most artistic in the musical development of Boston. The recognition of his long services will take the form of a notable concert, and many favorites will appear on that occasion. Evelyn Scotney, the brilliant prima donna of the Boston Opera Company, will be heard in a number of her strongest numbers. M. J. Dwyer, the Boston tenor, will be another heard to advantage, and selections by the Meistersingers will show Boston's three favorite quartettes of male voices massed in a single organization.

Tremont Temple.

At Tremont Temple tomorrow afternoon the Hochstetter-Pierson Company will present for the first time here 5,000 feet of moving picture films depicting the life of the great non-conformist, John Bunyan, and his "Pilgrim's Progress." These pictures show the photographic findings of F. W. Hochstetter, who comes from five generations of photographers, and who may be said to be eugenicized into the greatest photographer of this or any other age. Mr. Hochstetter accomplishes natural colors by absolute photographic methods. In addition to the pictures, a lecture will be given by Katherine Eggleston of the Emerson School of Oratory, who has also shown marked ability in her literary efforts at the Boston University. An organ recital will also be given by Professor Henderson on the great organ of the temple.

Summer Musical Shows.

The Majestic Theatre will inaugurate a Summer season of musical comedy on Monday evening, May 12, and the management has been fortunate in securing as the opening attraction "Louisiana Lou," a musical comedy which had a run of 327 performances, or nearly one solid year, at the La Salle Opera House in Chicago. "Louisiana Lou" comes from the same theatre in Chicago that sent to Boston such successes as "The Isle of Spice," "The Time, the Place and the Girl," and "A Knight for a Day." Among the principals will be Harry First, Burrell Barbaretto, Anna McNabb, Kathryn Wiley, Nell McNeil, Eleanor Henry, Alfred Deery, Lucie Carten, Walter Willis, and Abbot Adams.

"Firefly" Souvenirs.

The 200th performance of Trentini in "The Firefly," now playing so successfully at the Shubert Theatre, will be observed tomorrow evening by the presentation of attractive and unique souvenirs to each lady present. These souvenirs appear in three varieties. One is a china candle lamp, standing eleven inches high, made of genuine German bisque, including shade, shade holder and candle, and another is a China fruit set. There are four fruit knives in a pear or apple shaped holder. The third is an imported metal candlestick with candle.

Cleopatra Pictures.

An attraction of exceptional interest at Symphony Hall the coming week will be the presentation of Helen Gardner, who has been called the "Bernhardt of moving pictures," in "Cleopatra," a five-reel production that is most comprehensive and elaborate in all its details. These presentations are limited to four days, tomorrow, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, each afternoon and each evening. The story of this beautiful, accomplished, daring and unscrupulous ruler of Egypt is one that lends naturally to dramatic presentation.

Coming Events.

After an absence of four years, George "Honey Boy" Evans and his company of blackface singers, dancers and comedians will return here for a week's engagement at the Boston Theatre on Monday, May 5.

Christie Macdonald will inaugurate a Spring engagement at the Colonial Theatre on Monday evening, May 5, when she will be seen in "Sweethearts," a new light opera, the book of which has been supplied by Harry B. Smith and Fred de Gresac, the lyrics by Robert B. Smith and the music by Victor Herbert.

* * *

Elizabeth Apthorp McFadden's new play, "The Child," which Harrison Grey Fiske will present at the Plymouth Theatre for a limited engagement, beginning on Wednesday, May 7, is a drama of certain phases of life in the Middle West at the present time.

* * *

Among the attractions booked for early appearance at B. F. Keith's Theatre are John and Mae Burke, three Hickey brothers, Clara Inge, Graham Dent and Company, John Higgins, the champion jumper; Owen McGivney, the protean artist, and Leo Carrillo.

STRAUS ALWAYS MUSICIAN.

The combination of satire as well as music in a comic opera is rare. There has not been much of that sort of thing since Gilbert and Sullivan. Now it has arrived again in the combination of George Bernard Shaw and Oscar Straus in "The Chocolate Soldier." One of the amazing things about Straus is that even when he makes an obvious bid to capture the public taste he never allows it to be forgotten that he is first and foremost a musician, and all through his latest opera he shows his ability to write something genuinely appropriate to the situation.

Trentini Busy Every Moment

Songbird's Recreation Walking

EMMA TRENTINI, THE COMIC OPERA PRIMA DONNA.

She Likes Embroidery, but Finds Time Is Scarce and Has to Work Hard Until 2 During the Day.

Perhaps it would be better if the public did not wish to know anything of the people who are supposed to give themselves only professionally. But the public does. It is like the child who asks always if the story is true. It all comes from the bump of humanity, which phrenologists say everyone possesses. All of which leads up to the story of the domestic side of life of Emma Trentini, the delightful little Italian song bird, who has delighted Bostonians in "The Firefly."

If a sample sheet could be extracted from the daily life book of Trentini, it would reveal how the little prima donna arises at 10 o'clock every morning. After her bath, dressed in something soft and weightless, she gives herself over to her maid. Then comes her coffee and papers. And so run the rest of the hours.

"I write letters or have a business consultation with my manager, and attend to all other matters, so that at 2 in the afternoon I am ready to go for a walk. Returning home from my sauntering, I enjoy myself by doing a bit of fancy sewing, just to be domestic.

"I don't have much time to embroider, though I did begin some work several years ago. A cousin of mine was embroidering a table square which I admired greatly, and I became enthusiastic and made up my mind to do one like it. I went to the bazaar and bought enough silk to make a dozen and went to work. I embroidered one flower and one leaf that Summer, and I have done one leaf since. That was several years ago."

SAW WORTH OF PLAY.

Mrs. Morris Responsible for Bringing "Blindness of Virtue" Here.

A woman is said to be responsible for the appearance in this country of the Little Theatre Company of London, which is to present the "Blindness of Virtue" at the Park Theatre this week. Mrs. William Morris, wife of the manager of Harry Lauder, is said to have induced her husband to bring the play and the company to this side of the Atlantic. Mrs. Morris, while chatting with friends at the Savoy Hotel in London, chanced to hear an acquaintance speak enthusiastically of "The Blindness of Virtue," which was then being presented at the Little Theatre. Her curiosity aroused, Mrs. Morris attended the afternoon performance and became so enthusiastic over the sincerity of the play, the splendid message it conveyed and the amazing acting of the members of the company that she and several friends attended the performance again that evening. The next evening, much against his will, Mr. Morris was induced to go to the Little Theatre and see the play over which his wife had become so excited. At the end of the first act Mr. Morris called upon Charles Kenyon, manager of the theatre, and secured an option on the American presentation.

TENOR PURSUED BY NAVY UNIFORM

Henry Taylor, tenor with the Aborn English Grand Opera Company, is a native of Boston and his family reside here.

"I entertain a kindly regard for light opera even though my ambitions now are all in the direction of the more serious lyric drama," said Mr. Taylor, "for it was the more frivolous entertainment, musical comedy, which marked my stage debut. That took place when 'The Prince of Pilsen' was first produced.

"Up to that time I had been a church singer, but I did manage to obtain a position as a chorus man in the widely popular 'Old Heidelberg' number in 'Pilsen.' I continued in that place for some time when Henry W. Savage cast me for the naval lieutenant in that piece.

"This change started me in a peculiar province. I find it almost impossible to shake off the naval uniform. I don't know how many times I have donned that garb in all varieties of opera—grand, comic, etc.

"When the English 'Madam Butterfly' was first being prepared, Mr. Savage naturally enough remembered me as the perpetual naval officer in white ducks, and I was engaged as one of the tenors for the part of the perfidious Pinkerton."

WHY HIS FACE WEARS CREPE.

Thornton Got Only $3 for Popular Song That Sold Well.

If you had written a song that attained the popularity of "When You Were Sweet Sixteen," and only got $3 for it, wouldn't you look sad? Then why wonder at James Thornton, who is appearing at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, for wearing crepe on his countenance? For he's the author of that song, and that's what he got for it.

"I don't mind the loss of the money," he says, "but do you know I never heard that song sung in public—except when I sang it myself. I know it's been sung a lot, but I've never heard it.

"In the days of old, when I used to write my songs and send them to the publishers as soon as they were finished, things were different. There wasn't so much commercialism as there is now. A writer was able to get something out of a song. Harry Kennedy, Paul Dresser and I used to do about all the song writing then, but things changed about the time I wrote 'When You Were Sweet Sixteen.' Why, when I wrote 'My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon' I got everything that was coming to me.

"In the old days a man had a chance to live. It was then that Stephen Adams wrote 'Nancy Lee.' Three million copies of that song were sold and he got rich. But today a song does well if its sale runs to 50,000 copies."

'POPS' SEASON TO OPEN ON MAY 5

Two New Conductors and Enlarged Orchestra Among Features This Year.

With the close of the Symphony season next Saturday night Symphony Hall will undergo its annual Spring transformation in preparation for the Pop concerts which begin on the following Monday evening, May 5. The false floor of the hall will be taken out and the formal seats replaced by tables and chairs. The chorus room at the end of the south corridor will become, as in past years, a pleasant refreshment room for the patrons of the balconies. Formality will disappear until the beginning of July.

The Pops this season will run eight weeks and a half, from Monday evening, May 5, until Thursday evening, July 3. In other essentials they will be the same as they have been for the past few years. One important fact, however, should be noted. The orchestra will be considerably larger than it has ever been. Instead of fifty-five men it will have sixty-six.

Two New Conductors.

Moreover, interest will be increased greatly by the appearance of the two new conductors. These are Mr. Otto Urack, the assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and Mr. Clement Lenom, one of the oboes of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Maquarre, who has become a great favorite in the last few years, will have the largest share.

Mr. Urack will begin and will be the conductor of the first three weeks. Mr. Urack, as is generally known, came to this country last Fall as one of the principal 'cellists of the orchestra and assistant conductor, and during the illness of Dr. Muck during the Winter he conducted the Symphony concerts here and in many cities with much success. He is making an admirable set of programs, and his success seems already assured.

Fourth Season for Favorite.

The next three weeks and a half Mr. Maquarre will have charge of the orchestra. This will be Mr. Maquarre's fourth season in this place. His high-spirited interpretations and his beautiful programs have given him a unique place among the various men who have conducted these concerts.

Mr. Lenom, who will conduct the last two weeks, is one of the most eminent musicians of the orchestra. He is a man of great experience and much is expected of him.

Reservations are now being taken for tables and balcony seats for any part of the season. There will be the usual number of special college nights. Amherst College will celebrate May 14. Brown University will have its first night on May 28. Williams, which has come to be one of the most popular nights of the season, comes on June 3. The Harvard Club has the hall June 10, and other special nights will be announced later.

THEATRE FOR $20.

"Honey Boy" Evans Tells of His Chance to Run House.

George "Honey Boy" Evans, the [illegible] minstrel favorite, hopes to some day be interested in a Broadway theatre that will be the home of minstrelsy. In discussing this ambition he is wont to tell a humorous incident of his embryon days as a Thespian, when the small sum of $50 was the barrier to his possession of a "tank" theatre, and the extremely "high" value he placed on his services kept him from occupying the stage in this playhouse.

The "Honey Boy," a youth in Streator, Ill., saw an advertisement from the manager of a theatre in a nearby town requesting actors to apply to him for work and to name their salaries.

The "Honey Boy," who last Summer was paid $1,500 a week in vaudeville, wired the manager he would work for $40 a week.

"Send that sum and $10 more and you can have the theatre," was the succinct answer he received.

The "Honey Boy," with his company of blackface comedians, singers and dancers, appears here after an absence of four years, at the Boston Theatre, during the week commencing Monday, May 5.

"MUCH ADO" TO BE SEEN.

Will Be Novelty Offered by Sothern and Marlowe.

The novelty of the Sothern and Marlowe engagement at the Shubert Theatre which will cover a period of three weeks beginning Monday, May 12, will be "Much Ado About Nothing." This is the second revival of the comedy that Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe have made.

During the first year of their joint stellar combination in 1904, the three plays presented were "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet" and "Much Ado About Nothing." Of these three plays, "Romeo and Juliet" and "Hamlet" have remained permanently in their repertoire since that time.

As Sothern and Marlowe carried but three productions on tour during the first years of their appearances together, "Much Ado About Nothing" was set aside after the first season for other revivals. Previous to Miss Marlowe's appearance with Mr. Sothern in the comedy, she had impersonated the role of Beatrice with great success.

WELL TRAINED FOR PART.

Mattie Edwards, Mother in "Round-Up," Had Experience on Frontier.

Mattie Edwards, who appears as Josephine, the mother of Echo Allen in "The Round-Up," should be well within the atmosphere of the play, as Miss Edwards has had many unusual experiences on the frontier. At the age of sixteen Miss Edwards was appointed Deputy United States Marshal at Fort Smith, Arkansas, when that fort was headquarters for the most extensive criminal court in the world. Miss Edwards in her official capacity was instrumental in the arrest of the notorious desperado, Jim Dalton, and without assistance placed the handcuffs on him. It was shortly after this that Dalton was killed. That Miss Edwards is still an expert shot with the revolver is evidenced by the fact that at her Summer place in the Adirondacks last Summer she brought down a hawk on the wing, one of the most difficult shots ever attempted with a revolver.

NEW 'COLORED MOVIES' ARE OUT

Tints Now Made Simultaneously with the Pictures.

The thirty-second season of the Symphony Orchestra will end next Saturday evening, May 3. The season from every point of view has been most successful. The general opinion is that under Dr Muck the orchestra has been restored to its old-time virtuosity and certain it is that the past Winter has seen some of the most brilliant concerts in the history of Boston.

From the other important point of view, the financial, the Winter has been all that could be wished for. The orchestra has played to practically "capacity houses" since it began its work last October. Already subscriptions are being taken for the outside cities where it gives a series of concerts and these are far ahead of the corresponding date of a year ago. This means that next season will be at least as successful as the one just ended.

As Tribute to Wagner.

At the request of many of the patrons of the Symphony concerts Dr Muck has determined to make his last program in commemoration of the centenary of Richard Wagner's birth. The death of Mr ...uecker, for twenty years harpist of the orchestra, compelled him to make certain changes in his plans, but the second half of the program will be given to Wagner. He will play three pieces—the "Rienzi" overture, the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" and the prelude to "Parsifal." As Dr Muck points out, these three works represent most significantly the beginning, the middle and the end of Wagner's creative career.

Will Be Welcome Opening.

The symphony which will lead the program will be Brahms' in C-minor, No. 1. When Dr Muck came to Boston in the Fall of 1906 it was his performance of this symphony which first revealed him to the musical public of this city as one of the greatest conductors of our time. It has been asked for many times during the past Winter and its appearance on the program will be warmly welcomed.

READY FOR FIFTH DANCE.

The Tappa Nu Kegga Society is running its fifth annual dance tomorrow evening in Orange Hall, Brookline. The dance committee is composed of Francis Nolan, Francis Waul, Thomas Kennedy, Edward Meany. The aids are Percy Bartlett, Arthur Reilly, Frank Kennedy, George Keith and Francis Reilly. Mrs. Lincoln Walizer will act as matron.

WHILE the first of Mr. Arnold Bennett's dramatic offerings has not stirred us as deeply as might have been expected of goods from so clever a writer, it may still be conceded that Mr. Bennett posse ses a profound sense of comedy in whatever task he sets for himself. "What the Public Wants," which occupied four of the Horniman Players' performances at the Plymouth last week, was smart enough in its lines to be a much better play than it proved to be. It was in Mr. Bennett's best and breeziest style, satirical and brilliant; but rather too conversational for extraordinary success on the stage. Mr. Bennett's characters had a terrible time of it, and like well bred Englishmen they nearly talked themselves blind without saying very much. You never could feel any great emotion over Mr. Bennett's commonplace situations, but you could enjoy his brilliant lines. The members of Miss Horniman's English company wore their nationality on the tips of their tongues and affected a subdued manner of playing that made it difficult to catch all that was said. The company, however, has stood the test of a week's playing without showing signs of distress and has given many indications of considerable skill in their own art. Possibly the tameness of Mr. Bennett's play held these actor-folk in check.

THE picture drama has had its sensational Kinemacolor to show you pretty colors as the films rolled forward, but Kinemacolor is not to have the entire field of moving pictures in colors to itself. The new Hochstetter process of showing pictures in their natural tints will be exhibited at Tremont Temple tomorrow and continue daily for an indefinite period. To put you in an emiently proper frame of mind the subject of the Hochstetter series will be John Bunyan and his immortal allegory, "Pilgrim's Progress." Much is promised in this new color scheme for motion pictures, and Hochstetter is hailed as the greatest genius in photography since the days of Leguerre. Just where all this striving to enlarge the field of motion pictures will eventually land itself is hard to determine. It is said that Hochstetter devoted sixteen years of constant labor to perfecting his process. The legitimate drama knows no new wringles, but the picture drama—well, it has new tricks every day

THE signs of an early closing of the theatrical season are beginning to blossom abundantly. The Hollis Street Theatre is the first house to put up the shutters for the Summer, closing last evening with the departure of Otis Skinner and his "Kismet" company. Mr. Skinner also brings his season to an end with his Boston engagement. It has been a good many years since a Boston theatre has terminated its season's activities as early as this.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

FINDING real success in popular prices for good attractions, the management of the Boston Theatre will endeavor to add more profits to its pockets by following "The Round Up" with George (Honey Boy) Evan's minstrel company. Sensible prices, it appears, have more to do with the prosperity of an attraction than the value of the performance itself. This was clearly shown in "The Round Up," which had about exhausted its usefulness in Boston. With a downward revision in prices to help it along the play has gone through and is approaching the end of the most phenominal engagement it has ever had in any city since the first season it was produced, seven years ago. The Aborn Opera Company, also playing at popular prices, is having no difficulty in filling the Tremont Theatre. In spite of sturdy efforts to keep the Aborns here for a longer visit, the company enters upon its final week at the Tremont tomorrow.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

THE Spring "benefit" season has arrived and the honor of making the first experiment in that direction has been won by David Finestone and John W. Luce, who look after important details of the business at the Shubert Theatre. The Finestone-Luce benefit will be held Monday evening, May 5, and Emma Trentini and "The Firefly" will be the entertainment provided. Both Mr. Finestone and Mr. Luce have been attached to the Shubert Theatre since its opening, and both are well enough known to insure the success of the benefit performance. If you don't happen to know it, Mr. Finestone is the round and happy young man who presides over the box office, and Mr. Luce is the literary director of the place—the man who writes pieces about Shubert attractions and tries to get them printed in the newspapers.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

THERE will be a new face on the stage at the Castle Square Theatre tomorrow. With Mary Young approaching the joys of a European trip, she calmly turns over her dressing room and title of leading woman to Mary Keener, of whom many splendid things are expected. Miss Keener will make her first appearance before Castle Square patrons tomorrow, and if you can judge her acting ability by her looks, she will make good from the start. The young woman has been a student at the Empire Theatre School of Acting and has played brief engagements in stock and in support of Florence Roberts. Miss Keener is very young and has lots of ambition, neither of which should hurt her chances with the people who follow Mr. Craig's style of drama at the Castle Square.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

THE change of policy that will go into effect at the National Theatre tomorrow should bring its own reward to Mr. Keith, who has always tried to keep the entertainments at that theatre in close touch wih his patrons' demands. During the Summer, it is announced, the National will forsake vaudeville for the more tuneful musical comedy. Manager Haley has approached the subject with an eye to making the project a genuine Summer success, and to assure himself and the theatre's patrons a good run for their money he has completed arrangements with Cohan & Harris for the presentation of a number of Mr. Cohan's most successful attractions. The first of the musical comedy offerings will be "It Happened in New York," which will be presented tomorrow. It is planned to make a weekly change of bill during this Summer season, and plays that will follow are "The Yankee Prince," "The Governor's Son," "Little Johnny Jones" and "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway." It is also hoped to bring some of Fred C. Whitney's musical plays to the National during this period of light musical entertainment.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

ANOTHER Summer enterprise that should meet with favor with playgoers is the musical comedy stock company, which, it is now expected, will be housed at the Majestic during the months of ascending temperature. It is planned by the promoters of this stock company to give well known musical shows at popular prices. Inasmuch as the Majestic is already pretty well established as a Summer theatre, it should not be very difficult to draw public interest to that house if the quality of the entertainment is kept at any proper standard of excellence.

New Fables in Slang--By George Ade

The Dream That Came Out with Much to Boot.
Published by Permission of Cosmopolitan Magazine.
(Copyrighted by the International Magazine Co.)

ONCE there was a provincial Tradesman who gave his Yokemate a Christmas Present. It was a kind of Dingus formerly exhibited on the What-Not in almost every polite Home.

By peering through at the twin Photographs and working it like a Slide Trombone, one could get ravishing glimpses of Trafalgar Square, Lake Como, and the Birthplace of Bobby Burns.

Nearly every evening the Tradesman would back up to the Student Lamp and put in a delirious half hour with the Views.

While gazing up the Rue de Rivoli or across the rice-paddies at the snowy cap of Fuji, his Blood would become het by the old boyhood Desire to sail across the Blue to Foreign Parts.

Those who saw him mowing the Lawn little suspected that he was being inwardly eaten by the Wanderlust.

The tradesman, Edwin by name, and his Managing Director, Selena, formed the magic-lantern habit away back in the days of Stoddard. They never missed a chance to take in Burton Holmes. Sitting in the darkness, they would hold hands and simply eat those Colored Slides.

Selena belonged to a club that was trying to get a side-hold on the Art and Architecture of the Old World. She had a smouldering Ambition to ride a Camel in the Orient and then come home and put it all over a certain proud Hen who had spent six weeks in Europe.

She had to wait patiently until Edwin was threatened with a nervous Break-Down. At last the Happy Day arrived when the Specialist told him he must make his choice between a long Sea Voyage and a slow ride to the Family Lot.

A few days later they were curled up in a Cabin de Luxe about the size of a Telephone Booth, waiting for the Ocean Greyhound to recover from an attack of Hydrophobia.

When they tottered down the Gang-Plank, after six days on the playful North Atlantic, their only Comfort was derived from the knowledge that, as soon as they had rested up, they could write home and quote the Second Officer as saying it was the roughest Passage he had ever Known.

After spending a few days in London, trying to get warm, they moved on to Paris, which they remembered long afterward on acount of Napoleon's Tomb and the price of Strawberries.

Selena pulled her tall-grass French on a Hackman, but there was nothing doing. He had taken it from a different Teacher.

So they employed a Guide who knew all the Shops. If Selena happened to admire a Trinket or some outre Confection with Lace slathered on it, a perfumed Apache in a Frock Coat would take Edwin into a side room, give him the sleeve across the Wind-Pipe, and bite a piece out of his Letter of Credit.

Edwin did a little quick work with the Pencil and said they could either hurry on or else hie back to the Home Town and begin all over again.

Three weeks after saying good-by to Griddle Cakes they were in Naples, which they had seen pictured on so many Calendars.

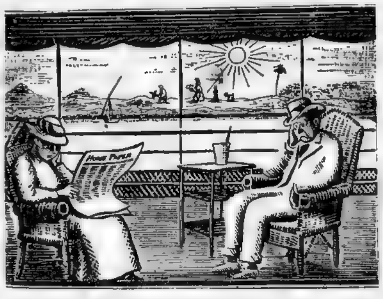
Once in a while they would venture from the Hotel to look at Vesuve without paying seven or eight members of the Camorra for the Privilege.

After being chased back into the Hotel, they would sit down and address Post-Cards by the Hour, telling how much they were enjoying their stay in Napoli, home of Song and Laughter

Next we see them in Egypt, still addressing Post-Cards, and offering anything within reason for a good Cup of Coffee.

Not that they would own up to being Home-Sick. No, indeed! They kept writing back that they enjoyed every Minute spent among the Cemeteries and Ruins, or sailing up the Nile, and Edwin was holding up wonderfully, for an invalid.

Only, when either of them spoke of the Children, or Corned-Beef Hash, or the Canary, a long Silence would ensue, and then the Nervous Wreck would cheer her by computing that they would be in God's Country within four months, if they escaped Shipwreck, Sunstroke, and Bubonic Plague.



Not that they would own up to being home-sick. No, indeed! They kept writing back that they enjoyed every minute of their sail up the Nile, and Edwin was holding up wonderfully, for an invalid.

While parboiling themselves down the Red Sea it began to soak in on them that, east of Suez, the Yank has about as much standing as the Ten Commandments.

The Congressman at home had assured them, on numerous occasions, that Columbia was the Jim of the Ocean and the most upholstered portion of the entire Foot-Stool.

Consequently, it was somewhat disconcerting to meet British Subjects who never had heard of Quincy, Illinois, and who moved their Deck Chairs every time they were given a chance to hear about it.

They would arrive in a New Town, fly to the Hotel, unpack, go out and buy their colored Post-Cards, come back to the Dump (usually called the Grand Hotel Victoria), address Cards to all the Names on the list, then pack up, pay the Overcharges, and ride to the Railway Station, accompanied by a small regiment of Bashi-Bazouks who were looking for Theirs.

Selena was still buying Souvenirs, but doing it mechanically, as if in a Trance

They had been stung with so many Oriental Phoneys and stuck up so often that they had gone Yellow and lost their Nerve

When they saw an outstretched Mitt, they came across without a Whimper.

Often, while riding in the dusty Cattle Cars and looking out at the parched Plains, they would think of the shaded Front Porch, only five minutes from Barclay's Drug Store, where they sold the Ice Cream Soda. Moaning feebly, they would return to the italicized Guide Book.

Each day they would purchase a Newspaper about the size of a Bed-Spread and search eagerly for American News. Once in a while they would learn that Congress had met or another Colored Person had been burned at the Stake. It cheered them immensely to know that the Land of the Free was still wiggling.

At Rangoon they met a locoed Countryman headed in the opposite direction. He was a hard-faced Customer who was fighting the Climate with Gin and Bitters, but they fell upon him and wanted to Kiss him when they learned that he had once met Selena's Uncle at Colorado Springs.

They told him how to save time in getting across India, and he gave them a list of Places in China and Japan that might be dodged to advantage.

Their principal Occupation, when not setting down Expressions of Delight on the Post Cards, was to study Timetables and cable ahead for Reservations.

The Invalid's one desire was to get home and take a regular Bath before being laid out.

Hong Kong pleased them exceedingly because they learned, by consulting Mr. Mercator's Projection, that they were on the Home Stretch and, with Luck in their favor, might live to see another Piece of Pie.

As soon as they were on the Pacific and headed for a refined Vaudeville Show, they began to recover the brave Spirit of Travel and blow about what they had seen.

The Towns and Temples and Tombs and Treasures of Art were all jumbled together, but by daily reference to Baedeker and Murray, they were enabled to find out where they had been and what they had seen with their own Eyes and how it impressed them, at the time.

Before touching at Honolulu they were real enthusiastic about India. They advised the awe-stricken Listener who had not been all the way around to be sure and take in Penang and Johore, and, if necessary, they would give him Letters of Introduction.

They said it had been a wonderful Experience. Yes, indeed. And broadening. Very. Then Edwin would wander to front end of the Ship and want to climb out on the Bowsprit so as to be in Frisco ahead of anybody else.

He convalesced rapidly as they approached the Golden Gate, for he knew that in a few days he could unpack for good and gallop down to the office and not have to worry about Travelling.

Two hours after landing Edwin saw a Porterhouse Steak and burst into tears.

They sped eastward by the first Train, still busy with the little Red Books, for they knew they would have to answer a lot of Questions.

"Shall we own up and tell them the Awful Truth?" asked Selena.

"Not on your Esoteric Buddhism," replied Edwin. "We never will be rewarded for our sufferings unless we convince the Neighbors that we had a run for our Money. It was a troubled Nightmare, in Spots, but when I lecture in the Church Parlor I am going to burn Joss Sticks and pull every variety of Bunk made famous by Sir Edwin Arnold and Lafcadio Hearn."

On the following Tuesday Selena appeared at the Club with her Mandarin Coat and the long Hindoo Ear-Rings. She had them frozen in their Chairs.

MORAL: Be it ever so Hard to Take, there is no place like away from Home.

How to Build a Nice Bungle-O

NOTHING gives one quite such good standing in society as a bungle-o. Country estates and Newport palaces were once the vogue, but civilization was raw in those days. Today the person who does not possess a bungle-o has no claim whatever on society.

Mr. Noah Webster, author of a little volume entitled, "Words, Words, Words," spells bungle-o, "bungalow," but his definition is "a thatched cottage in India." Had Mr. Webster been fortunate enough to have read our author's direction for the making of a bungle-o he would have spelled it as we do.

By following with great care the directions given here, you cannot fail in making as beautiful a mess as was ever jumbled together by human hands.

FIRST—Select a site. Many amateurs have failed because they lacked a proper site. Without a site the most costly bungle-o will prove impracticable.

NEXT—Having secured a site (a second-hand one will do) move it to whatever locality you prefer. A vacant lot will do. Now for the foundation.

Secure four large tomato cans, of equal size. Fill them with sand and set them upright, one at each corner of an imaginary oblong. An imaginary oblong may be secured for a few pennies out of any school geometry

FLOOR—Some of the more fastidious prefer a floor in their bungle-os. One cannot cheat in making floors, they should be on the level. Remove the bulkhead doors from your home if you rent a flat, or from your neighbor's house if you own your own house. Place these on the tomato cans.

WALLS—For the walls or sides, place your upright piano on the northern end, on the eastern side place the side of a closed trolley car. This may be secured by sawing off the side of any old trolley car you may happen to have about the house. This will at the same time provide windows. On the western side pile up about nine tiers of mahogany sectional book cases, which may be found in the advertising pages of any magazine.

ROOM—Even Noah knew enough to put a roof on his old ark of a bungle-o. You cannot do very well without it unless equipped with diving suits. Take up the linoleum from your kitchen floor and spread it over your bungle-o, nailing it securely to the top of the piano and thence to the mahogany book cases and the side of the trolley car. This will prove water-proof except, perhaps, in little spots here and there, but a little court plaster will remedy this.

COST—You can readily see that this sort of a bungle-o costs practically nothing except for the imaginary oblong secured from a school geometry for a few pennies.

THE DIVIDED GARDEN--By U. Green Fields

"IF you think, John Cholmoldy, that I am going out with you looking like that, you've got another—I mean, you are mistaken."

As Mrs. Cholmoldy had explained to her friends: "I am trying to chop slang, because there's nothing to it."

"Looking like what?" innocently asked her husband.

"Looking like something they couldn't sell at a rummage sale," answered his wife, gazing at his tattered clothes.

"This is all right for where I am goin," he told her.

"Then you are going to a hobos' convention"——

"I am going out to my garden," proudly replied John Cholmoldy.

"YOUR garden? Since when did you have a garden?"

"I have no garden, but ere night falls I will have one," he boasted, and started for the kitchen door

"Garden! If you knew anything about a garden, if you knew a cabbage from an orchid, it would be different. Why waste all your time planting seeds for the birds and bugs, when you might be taking me out in the car these fine Saturdays?"

"Oh, you can go out, but I think it every man's duty to get close to nature, and for the suburbanite a garden is the easiest way."

"But if you knew anything about a garden, John. You and your father and father's father and so on, if there were any 'so ons,' were brought up in the city. Why, the only ancestor you ever had who was a gardener was Adam, and he was so punk that he was driven out. I could make a better garden with an old iron spoon and a coal hod of dirt than you could with an acre of virgin soil"——

Right here John Cholmoldy laughed. He may have been an experienced gardener, but he was not an experienced husband, else he would never have laughed at his wife.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Molly. "I'll divide that plot out in the back yard; let you take your choice of either half, and if I don't raise two vegetables to your one this Summer I'll—I'll" ——

"You'll get me that big limousine for next Winter that I wanted so much. Come on now, be a sport. You are so sure of yourself here's a chance for you to squeal out of getting me the car."

"It's a go," said her husband, and together they divided the plot.

"Take your choice; which side is it?" he asked, after the ground had been spaded.

It wasn't so long after that when she served a nice lettuce salad. The leaves were small, to be sure, but tender and crisp. There were also some tiny radishes.

Her score was about one hundred to one. That is, for one cucumber he raised, she raised a hundred, and so on in the same proportion with everything.

"I'll give in, Moll," he said, at the end of the season. "You get the limousine, but for heaven's sake tell me what did you put on them to make them grow, and what did you use to kill the worms? I tried everything"

"Nothing; I just dug around and caught the bugs and worms."

"But I thought you were so soft-hearted you never had the nerve to kill even a beetle or cut-worm?"

"Oh, I couldn't. I just picked them up in an old iron spoon."

"Well, and then what?" asked her husband.

"Why, I had to get rid of them, so I tossed them all over into your garden, every day!"

A Hint to Tangourmands

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

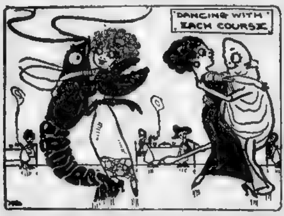
IN England, I understand, they all are bugs on tea; they drink, instead of alcohol, strong oolong for a spree. They stop their game of cricket upon the stroke of four, and all the players haste to swill a dozen cups or more. The horses stop their racing, and the bookmaker forgets, while sipping tannic acid, there's such a thing as bets. The English ladies drop their bombs, nor howl of women's votes, and struggle more to get their tea than get the bobbies' goats.

In England, now you understand, they all are bugs on tea, but never until recently did tea appeal to me.

A friend of mine in Bulgar skirt—they're slit most to the knee—said, "Won't you come along today, and take me out to tea?" I don't like tea a little bit, but—you hit it in one guess—it didn't take me long to say, "You bet your life—why, yes."

Oh, what a sight then met my eyes! The smoke rose up in swirls, through which there gleamed the flashing eyes of scores of pretty girls. I never dreamed that tea could cheer to such a wild extent, and give to all who sipped it such choreagraphic bent.

All hands were madly whirling in one great whirlmaze, till, overcome with trotting, they subsided in a daze. They tangoed and they trotted in very close embrace, and flashed a great variety of lingerie and lace.



If tea is thus terpsichoreed, why not all other meals? Why not have breakfast in a whirl of twinkling toes and heels? A bit of toast—a hard-boiled egg—some coffee piping hot—then a dash around the table in a dizzy turkey trot. A rest till luncheon time comes round, and we tango as we eat, for dancing seems more popular than milk and frazzled wheat.

A tango and a sip of tea will cheer us till we dine, and then the merry turkey trot will liven us like wine. Again we rest until the hour proclaims it time to sup, whereupon we trot and tango till the coppers close us up.

"LEFT YOUR HELM"

"Steer a Little Right of North"—New Expressions in the Navy.

SINCE the Secretary of the Navy has abolished the terms port and starboard for left and right, there will be no terrors in nautical lingo for the landlubber.

He can wander up and downstairs, from basement to roof of the ship and nobody will bother him.

The ship will head front instead of north and right instead of east, but we don't know what term will replace nor'-nor'-east.

"Abaft the binnacle," will be behind the road indicator.

'Twill be a gay life, shiver my timbers if it won't.

Suburban Notes

Iron and steel plants may be set out at any time when there's not too much water around.

Has-beens are often pretty good on the stringing end of it.

To prepare grass for a field sharpen each blade and stick it into the soil. If it comes out clean the field is sufficiently cooked.

An excellent and inexpensive pudding can be made from a couple of loaves of stale bread. All that need be added: One quart cream, two dozen eggs, dozen hot house peaches, pound of sugar, pound of raisins. Cheap and delicious.

Many persons overlook the fact that a handful of common tacks scattered in a bowl of mush will keeps guests interested all the time they are eating.

Hens that will not lay may be put in cages and taught to sing like canaries, although a song is less appreciated than an egg at breakfast time.

"Just a Song at Twilight" is O. K. in its way, so long as it isn't a mosquito that's singing it.

STRANGE BEHAVIOR OF SPARROWS.

TO THE EDITOR—I saw two sparrows building a nest yesterday. When the cock bird would put a white feather in the nest the hen would throw it out and substitute a brown one. What do you suppose was the reason for this?

WE REFUSE TO COUNSEL YOU IN THE MATTER.

TO THE EDITOR—The other morning, in the rear room of a saloon, where several male human beings were sitting and leaning, I began reciting a poem of J. Milton's. One of the leaners interrupted me in a rude manner, saying: "Aw, cut it out. That guy Milton was a Mexican." Thereupon I struck him, and found myself on the sidewalk before I had an opportunity to finish the poem. Ought I to return and finish it? Or is it true that "He who recites and gets thrown out ought not to raise another shout?"

Smiles From Everywhere

Replied in Kind.

A YOUNG married woman of Chicago was running down the station platform in a frantic endeavor to catch the Northern train just pulling out.

"To Duluth! To Duluth!" she cried, eagerly, waving to the brakeman on the rear end

"Toodle—ee—toodle—oh! Oh, you kid!" returned the brakeman, facetiously.

Happy Thought.

ROBINSON CRUSOE had just rescued the savage from the cannibals. "Whatever they do, they shan't touch a bit of meat on Friday!" he exclaimed, having already thought up a suitable name for his dark-complexioned protege.

Needless to say, Friday didn't make any bones about it, and they lived happily ever after.

After Tartar Sauce

A Story of the Red-Blooded Side of the Department of Agriculture.

By Wellington Smack, M. L. R.

FEW Americans know of the great research work done in wild parts of the world by agents of the Department of Agriculture.

How few know how Tartar sauce was brought to the United States!

James Macjink was one of the unknown agents who went to Wales, and after almost incredible hardships brought back the pair of Welsh rabbits from which every Welsh rabbit in this country is descended. Macjink had to learn the Welsh language and pass himself off as Lloyd Llongbow of Llangòlien, a native of Wales who had lived a llong time in Llexington, before they would llet him have one of the precious rodents.

Another daring worker for the department was David Doughboy. It is to Doughboy's daring that America owes canary seed. Doughboy stole a fast torpedo boat from the Navy Department, landed in the Canary Islands at night, loaded up with the seed from which they grow canaries and was back in the United States before any one knew he had gone.

But the story of the Tartar sauce is even more thrilling. As most people know, Tartary is the most savage country in the world, but Willie O'Hicks cared naught for that. His mission was to bring Tartar sauce back to the United States, and he did it. Twice he was shot, four times he was hanged and once he was drowned, but he never gave up the quest. So remember the name of Willie O'Hicks in future when you dally with steak and Tartar sauce.

The Fight in the Air

Fiction.*

By Whyte C. Gull, M. L. R.

PAUL OBAN was a daring aviator, but even his iron nerve failed him when a great golden eagle sank its claws into his neck as he whizzed over the Rocky Mountains.

How to get rid of the aerial monster?

The easiest way appeared to be by falling suddenly the 2,000 feet. If the eagle did not relax its hold and fly away it would be killed amid the ruins of the machine. Of course, Oban would be killed, too, but he never bothered much about his own fate.

He had another plan.

Throwing on full speed, he drove his 'plane so rapidly through the air that the intense heat engendered by the friction set fire to the bird's feathers and the smoke quickly suffocated it.

*(This incident occurred, but the bird was a swallow, not an eagle. Hence we label it "fiction." Accuracy above red blood, even.—Ed.)

Around the Ripsnorters' Campfire.

THE spread of the Legion of Ripsnorters has been amazing

Already the famous button of the organization may be seen stuck with walrus fat to the fur coat of an Eskimo Ripsnorter who is swimming through the ice floes in pursuit of a wounded bull whale.

The traveler in the dense jungles of Central Africa may see the emblematic rhinoceros upon the breast of a chief engaged in landing a five-ton hippopotamus with a trout rod.

The passer-by may see it worn by a colonel at Oyster Bay as he drives a plough with one hand and writes an essay on the Dik-Dik with the other.

On the wide reaches of the Amazon the diver who is about to cleave the muddy water to tackle, single-handed, the mighty boa constrictor, may have the M. L. R. button hung around his neck with a string of mahogany fibre.

Indeed there is no spot on the globe where one may not find a wearer of the button. The daring pathfinder in Brooklyn, the wandering adventurer in the Arabian desert, the rash intruder into the fastnesses of Oshkosh—all are Ripsnorters.

BEAUTY SECRETS FOR WOMEN

TO HAVE GLOSSY HAIR—The woman who washes her hair with soap or shampoos containing "free" alkali will always be bothered with dull, lifeless, "stringy" hair. To make the hair soft, fluffy and brilliant simply use an easily made, inexpensive shampoo consisting of a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water. This makes the head feel good, keeps the hair beautiful and adds a lasting lustre. It is a most thorough scalp-cleanser, removing dandruff and all irritation

TO GET RID OF FAT—No person need worry over being too fat. Excess fat disappears rapidly by taking before meals a tablespoonful of the following home made and harmless remedy. Dissolve 4 ounces of parnotis in 1½ pints of hot water. This simple, inexpensive method of fat reduction requires no vigorous exercising or dieting and leaves the skin smooth and firm

TO WHITEN THE SKIN—Women troubled with a sallow, oily or dark, "muddy" complexion will find splendid satisfaction in using a lotion made from 4 ounces of spurmax dissolved in ½ pint of witch hazel (or hot water), then adding 2 teaspoonfuls of glycerine. The excellent beautifying qualities of this inexpensive lotion make it necessary to beauty seekers. When on the face it seems part of the skin and makes the complexion smooth, velvety and free from all discoloration. It does not rub off like face powder and adds permanent beauty.

"Good Morning Ship"

Washington, April 15.—The General Board of the American Navy today issued orders to drop the use of the words "port" and "starboard" and use hereafter the words "right" and "left." The order has caused consternation among most of the old salts.—News Item.

HOW IT WORKS.

IT was a balmy evening.

The good old battleship Calissouri was ploughing (ploughing being a land term is quite permissible) her way across the broad expanse of waters, when Jenks, the look-out—excuse us, the night watchman—sighted a ship off his starboard—off the right side of the front end of the Calissouri.

"Ship ahoy!" shouted Jenks to the night officer on fixed post on the bri—on the upper front porch.

"Jenks, you antediluvian old sea-dog, I shall send you belo—downstairs and put you in the calaboose if you cannot remember to report properly!" the night officer on fixed post reprimanded him

"But, sir, I see a ship approachin' off our stabberd bows an' "——

"What's that?" yelled the O. on F. P.

"I—I see a ship on our right, up forwar'—up front, sir, an' seein' a ship I didn't know no other way, sir, to report it."

"Let me explain again," said the O. on F. P., patiently, "that the now obsolete phrase 'Ship ahoy!' was formerly a nautical form of greeting another ship. Now you must say 'Good morning, ship!' "

The commander of the Calissouri was sleeping comfortably in his bed room on the third floor. The sailors were sleeping in the basement in their hammocks up in the front end of the ship, and the pilot was turning the steering wheel in the little cupola that overlooked the front piazza.

The officer took his field glasses and looked at the approaching ship. At the same time one of the sergeants or inspectors or lesser officers was looking out of his window at the boat. Suddenly he hastened out into the dining room, and from there upstairs to the first veranda, and from there he went up several more flights of stairs until he was on the roof of the ship

"What do you make her—that is, have you any idea what her home port—home town—is, and where she's bound—going to?" queried the officer.

"No, sir," replied Jenks, "but she seems to be makin' about seventeen knots—about twenty-three miles, and she's makin'—headed directly across our bows"——

What the justly angered officer was about to say was lost in a terrific crash!

The great ships had collided, head on. Already the battleship was listing—tipping to port—to the left, and settling forward—in her front end. The other ship backed away, apparently unharmed, and began to lower boats for the rescue of the crew—that is, the hands, bosses and all, aboard the doomed Calissouri.

The commander, purple with rage, faced the captain of the other ship.

"Couldn't you see our—our right and left lights?" he asked of the captain.

"Yes, sir; I saw them plainly, port and starboard. Look yourself, quickly, before she sinks!"

The commander of the ill-fated battleship Calissouri looked. On the left, or port, side was a green light. On the starboard, or right, side was a red light.

"You see, I thought you were going from us instead of toward us; naturally"——

But the commander of the battleship waited to hear no more. With a groan he staggered away. It was all clear to him; Jenks had mixed the lights, for JENKS WAS LEFT-HANDED!

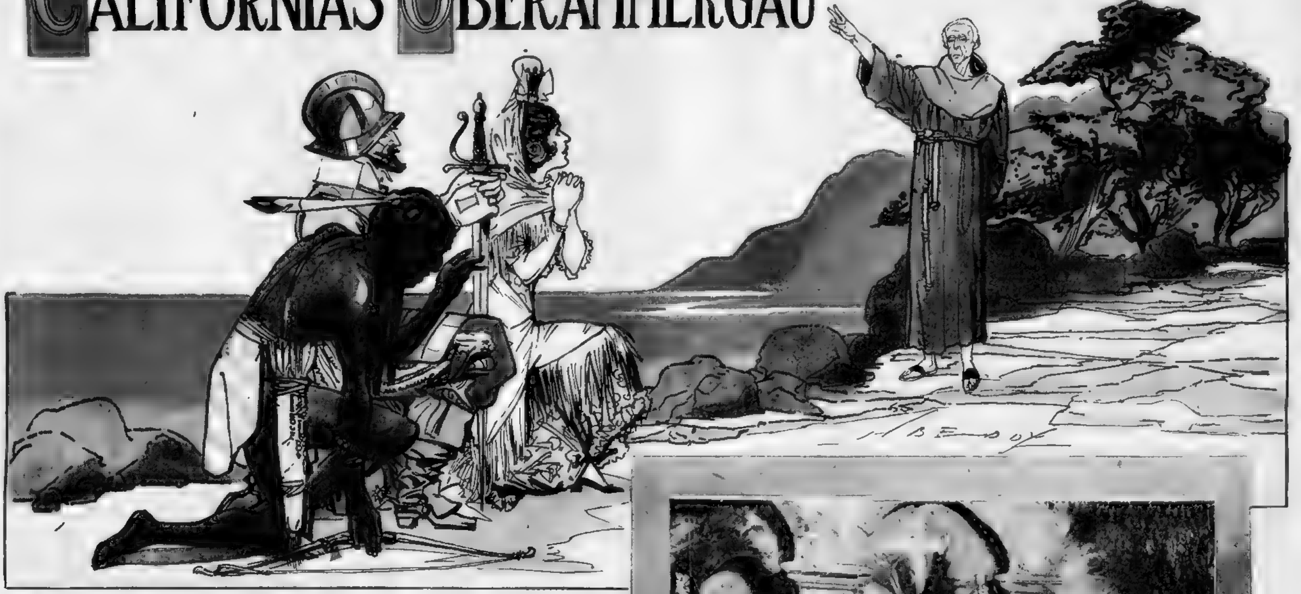
CALIFORNIA'S OBERAMMERGAU



The Picturesque "Mission Play," the Unique Pageant Drama at Los Angeles which Reproduces the Far West's Most Heroic and Romantic Times . . .

THE old Mission days of California — that picturesque period like none other in history—have been reconstructed, and are being perpetuated by a remarkable pageant-drama called the "Mission Play" in a little theatre at San Gabriel, not far from Los Angeles, the very heart of the old Mission country In its spirit and in much of its technique the "Mission Play" is akin to the famous production at Oberammergau.

It is, indeed, intended that it shall be California's Oberammergau, and it is the hope of the patriotic producers that they will be able to make it a permanent institution The play enters its second season this year, and the increasing number of "pilgrims" has made the hope seem justified

The play was written by Mr John McGroarty, a native Californian. Senator R. F Del Valle, of California, realizing the importance to his State of preserving for the present and coming generations a picture of its most heroic and romantic time, enabled it to be produced

The "Mission Play" is given in a quaint building, which in itself lends atmosphere to the drama.

In the first act Fra Junipero, the founder of the Mission, a Franciscan whose character was startlingly like that of St. Francis of Assisi, is seen at the old San Diego Mission awaiting the arrival of Don Gaspar de Portola from the north, where he went to find Monterey in order to carry back arms and provisions. Portola did not find Monterey, but he did discover what is now the site of San Francisco. Discouraged, he tries to persuade Fra Junipero to return to Mexico. The Padre, devoted to his work of Christianizing the Indians, refuses. He makes an eloquent prayer to Heaven to change Portola's determination. At its conclusion the long-expected relief ship appears on the horizon, and Fra Junipero baptizes his first Indian convert.

In the second act Carmel Mission, near Monterey, is shown in 1784, the chain of missions has been established, and all are prospering The contrast between the spiritual power of the padres and the military control of Spanish California is shown by what is claimed to be an historical incident of the brutality of Commandante Rivera, which is frustrated by the wit and courage of Fra Junipero In this act faithful characteristic scenes of the lighter side of life in California are depicted by dances, singing and Indian sun dances.

In the third act is shown the situation in 1847, when the Mission had, through greed and evil practices of corrupt officials and Americans regardless of all but gain, passed into decay

Such in brief outline is the story of the "Mission Play" What words cannot convey is the true atmosphere, the perfect historic detail, the pathos, nobility and sense of reality which permeate the reconstruction and which lead the Californians to believe that in the "Mission Play" they have a creation which will live on for scores of years to show the world the heroic drama of the birth of California.

NEW DISCOVERIES ALL OVER THE EARTH

Just WHY YOU ARE Getting BALD

THE SCALP NEEDS Blood IRRIGATION, Just as a Field Needs Water Irrigation

By Prof. W. PEABODY BARTLETT.

ON many large plains you will find spots where the grass does not grow. Plant these places to grass, put in irrigating canals and your barren spots will become covered with grass. As long as your irrigating canals work properly and a sufficient supply of water reaches the once barren spots, the grass will continue to grow.

Now cut out your supply of water in the canals and see what happens. The grass will cease growing, it will turn brown, and next season no more grass will grow, while the old grass will have been worn away, trodden down, blown off and disappeared.

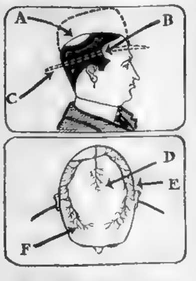
The spot once green with a luxuriant growth of grass has become "bald."

You have a good head of hair. This is because the blood supply at the roots of the hair is plentiful. Now wear continually a tight hat that binds the tiny arteries and does not allow the blood to reach the hair roots, and wherever this happens the hair will begin to come out. Unless this is promptly relieved no more hair will grow

Again, your advancing age may be responsible for an impoverished condition of the blood, and for a hardening of those very minute arteries in the scalp. The same result follows, baldness. Your head needs irrigating about the hair roots as the barren prairie needs irrigating about the grass roots.

It has been said that there are germs that cause baldness. The microbe of baldness has been discovered, but along with this discovery has come another discovery to the effect that it isn't the microbes that cause baldness, but baldness that causes the microbe This microbe is found on bald heads because it lives where hair cannot live

Yet this microbe is no more to be blamed for baldness than weeds growing rank on an abandoned farm are to be blamed for the poor condition of the land Both baldness and hardening of the arteries result from the same cause. The scalp is nourished by means of blood irrigation from many groups of arteries Each one of these carries the needed nourishment to a little group of hair roots. If your hat or any head covering so compresses these arteries that the blood cannot reach the hair roots, baldness begins. The hair falls out only where it dies out. A healthy hair will not fall out. The first hair to die out is that at the ends of these irrigating arteries. This is quite natural, since the blood reaches these ends of arteries last. As these terminal spots are over the temples and on the back of the head, baldness naturally first begins in those places.



A and B—Where Baldness Begins. C—How Hats Bind the Head., D, E and F—Ends of Tiny Arteries Where the Blood Supply is First Stopped by Pressure.

Our scalps are really advance guards of our systems, and the first to give warning of impoverished blood circulation. Since hair was put upon our heads for the protection of our scalp, it is wrong to crop it or shave it or even put strong washing solutions in the hair that take away the oily substances that furnish the life of the hair itself. All this will help to bring baldness. If you keep the hair so thoroughly scrubbed with alkaline substances as to keep the oil washed out, your baldness will come on much more quickly. Cold water is not natural, and has a tendency to do harm to the hair and the whole system if too frequently applied. Sick people should never have their hair shaved from their heads if it is a possible thing to avoid it, because a convalescent needs the protection to his scalp.

If your hair is beginning to fall out, your chief care should be to increase the blood supply; do not bind the scalp with stiff hats. Take exercise and get in the open air and consult a reliable physician as to the best means of improving the quantity and quality of your blood. This will stave off baldness to a remarkable degree

When your brush and comb bring out quantities of hair it is because the hair is dead and ready to fall out. Hair that falls out naturally will be replaced with strong hair, otherwise the hair that comes out will not be replaced at all, or else weaker hair will take its place, which will soon die and fall out, and no more will grow there

Baldness and gray hair are quite different matters. The normal color of your hair depends upon the coloring of pigments deposited in the channels that supply the nourishment. Man's hair will whiten where the skin is irritated, subjected to pressure or kept wet, aside from turning white through the advancing years, when the supply of coloring matter is lessened or entirely cut off.

Oily fluids are a natural nourishment for the hair. It has been said that ordinary vaseline is one of the best hair-growers known. Some people have even massaged the scalp with beef marrow with good results. That oil is the natural food of the hair is shown in the manner in which the hair bathes in the oily fluid held in the terminal cup of the sebaceous glands before it springs forth from the follicle. This bath, which each hair undergoes before it springs forth, strengthens the pigments, tones the color and renders the hair fit to cope with the destructive action of atmospheric heat and cold.

Some NEW THINGS Found Out ABOUT SUNBURN

By Dr. L. K. HIRSHBERG.

SOME recent experiments made in Algiers, coupled with experiments made in this country last season, concerning the action of the sun on the human skin, together with preventives and remedies for these burns, have brought to light considerable that is new and interesting concerning sunburn under various conditions

The recent experiments in Algiers were made by Surgeon-Major Nuramond de Laroguette, of the French Army, and he was awarded a medical prize by the government for his successful work along these lines. It has long been known that the sun's rays set up various reactions in the skin, according to the quality, the intensity and the duration of your exposure to the sun. The results of strong sunshine, and experiments of the sun's effects on areas of skin of various parts of the body exposed to the open air or behind glass screens differ with people according to their complexions, their general health and their skin

In the open air—in man—exposure of from thirty to forty minutes to the sun at Atlantic City gave rise to slight flashy redness, accompanied by a little sweating. This redness made its appearance after fifteen to twenty minutes' exposure, and soon subsided. It only occurs when the temperature exceeds ninety degrees. It is a redness which appears to be due quite as much to contact with heated air as to the direct action of the heat rays of the sun.

Toward the second hour after exposure a secondary redness began to make its appearance which underwent gradual development during the remainder of the day; already well marked by the fourth hour, it reached its maximum toward the twelfth hour. At this stage the zone was uniformly bright red, but pressure with the finger drove the blood out of the dilated veins and capillaries, leaving a white mark. Twenty-four hours later this was no longer the case; there was more or less discoloration under the skin, with red spots about the color of wine dregs. In the course of the next four days this discoloration became much darker, and each succeeding day for three weeks the skin became browner and browner. The skins that were most red at first were the ones that afterward became the darkest.

This dark color persisted for a variable lapse of time, from several weeks to several months, according to the severity and the number of exposures to sunlight. It then faded and slowly disappeared.

In a series of experiments parts of skin were exposed to the sun after being variously tinted with water colors: violet, blue, green, red, black and brown, the colors being well marked and of medium depth, but having no thickness. Under violet and blue the reactions were approximately as pronounced as in the open air. In the other parts the redness was rather less pronounced, though still well marked. With the different colors, even under the blue and violet, the redness was very trifling; when the color was dark and thick it formed a protective varnish on the epidermis. Color bands alternately light and dark, with and without thickness, yielded zones of redness, which differ greatly and were well marked or very slight.

In spite of the artificial coloration of the skin, the redness ran its course thereafter toward pigmentation much the same as in the open air, with an intensity proportional to the amount of the rednes.

Under window glass the secondary redness is not so great and appears slowly; it requires sittings, lasting at least sixty minutes, in a strong sun to produce slight redness. The dark brown color is also much less marked and of shorter duration. Under the different colored glasses marked differences were noted; under the [illegible], red, blue and violet glasses the primary erythema was about equal to that met with under window glass. Under the black or smoked and green glasses it was less marked than under window glass when the latter is kept at a small distance from the skin, [illegible] pronounced on the contrary when the glass is in contact.

The final series of tests were made to find a cure or some preventive of sunburn. When water is kept in contact with the skin in a very thin layer, the skin became sunburned even more quickly than in dry air. Glycerine applied in the same way helped only a little in preventing the sunburn; but olive oil, vaseline, cold cream, wool fat and oils or fats in general all, whether in ointment form or plain, almost entirely prevented any development whatsoever of the redness, the browning, the blisters or any signs of sunburn.

The treatment of sunburn then, according to these new discoveries, is not only to anoint your skin with vaseline or olive oil before encountering the sun's rays, but also to use fatty and oily unguents for the relief and treatment of sunburn, once it has developed. Carbolated vaseline or oil, salicylic acid ointments, calamine lotion and other such simple remedies should be among the equipment of everyone venturing forth on a Summer's afternoon or a longer holiday at the seashore or the mountain

Experiments made on severe sunburn proved of unusual interest. It was found that tender skin subjected to powerful sun's rays throughout the day and repeated one or more days resulted in such burns that large blisters, as large as quarter and half dollars, would appear on the skin, while the soreness had the same sensation as would follow on being badly burned by hot liquids.

In a party of young fellows starting camping out and going about during the day in the hot sun wearing only sleeveless jerseys, some of them were prepared for the sunburn by means of rubbing them in carbolated vaseline. The result was that they had no blisters, nor even sufficient redness of the skin to make themselves uncomfortable, while the others, who, in the experiment, went about without this on their skins were severely sunburned.

People with only a couple of weeks' vacation who wish to lay about on the shore or paddle canoes with shoulders and arms bared will save themselves a great deal of suffering with just such a simple precaution as covering themselves wherever exposed with the vaseline. Generally only the tip of the nose really "peels" from sunburn, and by keeping carbolated vaseline on the nose even this disagreeable trouble can be avoided

Harvesting the Grain Without Reaping It

HAD any one stated only a short while ago that the labor of reaping grain was a waste of time and energy and money he would have been looked upon as a dreamer, a man with an unpractical imagination, but to-day a Kansas man, Curtis C. Baldwin, claims to have perfected a threshing machine which gathers and threshes the grain without the necessity of reaping it. In other words, the grain is secured, cleanly threshed, but the straw is left standing rooted in the field just as it grew.

Practical farmers claim many advantages for this method. In the first place it saves a vast amount of labor. The need of reaping the grain, securing it in proper piles to be fed into a thresher and taking away the straw afterward is a great expense. In the second place, it is held to be much better to leave the straw standing in the fields and to plow it back into the sod, where it is worth far more to the farmer as fertilizer for his soil than it would bring if sold merely as straw.

Then again, it saves large areas of land that have hitherto been occupied with these gigantic straw piles and also prevents no little losses that have resulted from accidental burning of such piles. The reaper travels through the grain fields "head-first." That is, a part of the machinery protrudes like the cow-catcher of a locomotive, and a draft of air made by a revolving fan draws the heads of the grain into an opening, where a revolving sort of paddle wheel or cylinder with teeth removes them. Other mechanism carries the grain through threshing machinery that blows out the chaff and allows the clean grain to fall from a tube into a bag, or even through an extension tube into a cart. Horses may haul the thresher or motor power may be adopted where the land is sufficiently level and smooth to allow it.

This invention does away with the need of a great many farm hands in harvest time, and as such men are always difficult to secure, it means an advantage to the farmers in a great many ways.

Mr. Baldwin, the inventor, claims this non-reaping threshing machine will reduce the cost of harvesting grain from 14 cents to 2 cents a bushel. A reduction that, if all farmers used it, might help a little in reducing the cost of grain from grower straight through to consumer

The machine is made adjustable, so that it may harvest the grain from oats, wheat, rye, barley and the like, and even be adjusted to suit various fields of grain, as some matures with far shorter stalks than others. Once adjusted, the machine will go through a grain field, the inventor claims, and save a much larger per centage of the grain than could be saved by the old method of first cutting it and putting it in "shocks" or bundles and later tossed into the old-style reaper, as by that rough method much of the ripe grain was shattered and lost in the stubble of the field.

After the grain has been harvested with this machine nothing more need be done until ploughing time, when the thoroughly dry stalks, together with their roots, are turned over and buried well under the ground. These, of course, decay and furnish a valuable form of fertilizer for the soil. Being quite dead by the time of the ploughing the roots do not sprout to give trouble, but merely decay. As the land has to be ploughed before planting there is no extra work in this

QUASSIA for the CURE of the DRINK HABIT

ALL sorts of "cures" for the drink habit have been recommended, from the humble meadow herbs to bi-chloride of gold, but one of the simplest remedies, according to Dr. T. D. Crothers, of Buffalo, is quassia, that bitterest of drinks. For office or home treatment Dr. Crothers believes it is of the best.

"I have found," said Dr. Crothers, "a concentrated solution of quassia to be the most effective of all the remedies." He explains that an infusion of quassia should be made and then boiled down once or twice in order to obtain double the strength. It should be given to a drinking man with strict orders to take half an ounce every two hours throughout the day.

The drinking man may drink his liquor quite as usual, but under no consideration must he neglect his half ounce of quassia every two hours. This remedy is, of course, best for the drink victim who is anxious himself to gain a victory over it.

The way this works is that in a short time a form of quassia poisoning comes on. This poisoning does not affect the victim in any way except to make all forms of spirituous liquors intensely disgusting and actually repelling to him

Ordinarily the result of this is at first surprise on the part of the drinking man when he discovers that he not only does not like liquor, but that it makes him deathly ill to drink it. Next he is pleased—that is, providing he is anxious to cure himself—and while the bitter quassia is extremely unpleasant he sticks to it and takes pleasure in drinking it, knowing that a cure is being effected. From a strong dislike of liquor the moment he tries to drink it he begins to dread trying to drink it and finally all desire to make the attempt has left him.

"Invariably," says Dr. Crothers, "such a drink victif who honestly desires to break himself of the habit expresses his deepest gratitude to his physician after he has taken the cure."

New Ways to Kill POISON WEEDS; Some New ANTIDOTES

"AN ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is the old adage we all know, and it works well in case of the slightest chance of ivy poisoning

Some men had been employed to root out poison ivy They were prepared for the work by swathing their arms and wrists in bandages, and heavy gloves were given them to put on. After rooting out the ivy vines hot water and laundry soap were ready for use, in which they first washed very thoroughly their hands and arms, using the water as hot as they could bear, after which they washed their faces and necks, then again their hands, thus washing off any effects of possible absorption of liquid from the plants. Not a man was poisoned by his dangerous work

It is held that the contact of poison ivy does not act at once, and if any one feels that they have been too near or touched unknowingly the ivy while gathering wild flowers—if they will use this hot water and soap as soon as home is reached serious effect may be forestalled If the poison has developed in small blisters like water blisters, a free use of household ammonia—clear—will dry up very quickly, unless it becomes a serious case, where a physician should be called, who will probably prescribe a lotion or wash of lead, to be used externally only. Be very careful not to rub the eyes with poisoned fingers.

Of course, the right thing to do is to advocate the destruction of poison ivy, wherever found—along the road sides and on stone walls especially; in fields, as it is a menace to all passers-by, many being affected in simply passing it, particularly if the wind should happen to blow toward the passer-by over the vine.

Garden clubs, village improvement societies, park commissioners in various parts of the States where the vine flourishes triumphant, could easily make a crusade against it this Fall and request owners of property to root it out and diminish the danger.

There are several ways of accomplishing this—burning in heaps after uprooting, or leaving them to freeze; pouring kerosene over it where it grows on the roots; in small sections, such as private gardens, if one will persistently cut off the foliage, its breathing powers will be eliminated and it will die eventually. If one decides to burn the roots and vines care must be taken to avoid breathing the fumes or smoke, standing away from the wind as the fumes are very poisonous to breathe

The poison ivy, poison sumac, poison dogwood, swamp sumac, all cause irritation of the skin. A saturated alcoholic solution of lead acetate is considered a specific for these.

The best season to destroy poison ivy (rhus radicus) is very early in the Spring, just as the leaves develop, or late in the Fall—never when it is in bloom or in its most vigorous state.

Wherever the three-leaved poison ivy grows you will find its companion, the five-leaved Virginia creeper or woodbine in the immediate neighborhood, which is considered the antidote for the poison

In case of poisoning by water hemlock emetics should be used at once or a stomach pump, the feet kept warm and a physician called at once

Belladona is another poisonous vine to be found attractive in the woods. It has purple, bell-shaped flowers, rather open, about the size of the harebell found in clusters, and which develop into beautiful green berries, size of a small wild cherry, turning red toward Fall and black when ripe The taste is sweet, but the whole plant has a heavy, disagreeable odor. All parts of the plant are poisonous and the root has been mistaken for a parsnip. It is also called the deadly nightshade from its stupefying effect. For this poison use an emetic and call your doctor. The jimson weed—daturna sarmonium with long ornate leaves and large, tubular white flowers—as well as bitter-sweet,—salanum dulcamara—are poisonous to eat, although not irritaing to the skin, and therefore should be avoided where children are in the party.

Why WOMEN Have Been TIMID and CHILDREN LIKE to Play "HIDE AND SEEK"

By WILLIAM LEE HOWARD, M.D.

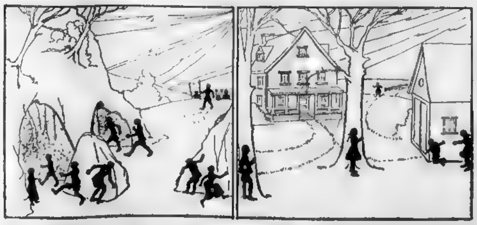
IN the paleolithic, or stone age, the people living on the shores of the Baltic and German seas, as well as the peoples in France, are known to have been cannibals. In those far off days the races from which we sprang differed but little from the savages of Terra del Fuego a century ago.

These savages lived in clans or communities which preyed upon each other. Any one coming into a clan village from another was considered an enemy, and so treated, for his call was to carry off a woman for a slave or a child for food.

At certain times the men of a clan would go to the hunt, remaining away for several days, the women sitting and watching at the entrances of their cave homes. The children would play outside, ever watchful. Upon spying a stranger the child would run in terror to its mother, who fled to the uttermost end of the dark cavern. Perhaps a general raid would be made, when mothers and children fled for safety. Frequently most all of the women and children would be captured, the returning husbands finding their homes empty of wives and children. The few women who were alert and agile enough to escape never forgot their fright, and this instinct of terror was born in the future children from generation to generation.

These inherited instincts are slowly, very slowly eradicated from the human memory, and can be seen to-day in the rush to the mother a child makes upon the approach of a stranger. Perhaps when you see a pronounced evidence of this fear in a child and mother, the instinct has come down through thousands of years from a child and mother who had to flee to the woods or to the cover of swamps and remain for weeks or months in awful terror. Perhaps the child was prenatally developed under this time of maternal fright and suffering

Naturally the instinct of fear of strangers would be perpetuated, as are most of our instincts which past conditions of existence developed. We must remember that the state of society in which these occurrences would be frequent lasted many thousands of years, and that probably no generation was exempt from this particular influence.



In the Prehistoric Days the Savage Children Learned to Run and Hide in Their Cave Homes Whenever They Saw an Enemy Approach to Capture or Kill Them. Children of To-day Love to Play "Hide and Seek" Because They Inherit the Memory of These Prehistoric Dangers

The play of young children is almost always some form of mimic warfare. There is the game of "hide and seek." The child hides behind a door or curtain and pretends to fear, and when discovered utters cries of alarm and attempts to flee the stranger who seeks his prey. "Bo-peep" is simply another example of this ancestral trait. When the little child peers around the corner of a table or bed and suddenly draws back in hiding, we have a modern illustration of what it had to do thousands of years ago.

But this latter game demonstrates the force of inherited instincts of a much earlier form of existence. It is the remains of a habit of arboreal ancestors. The table, bed or chair is merely a substitute for a part of the tree trunks behind which the body is supposed to be hidden, while the eyes, and as little else as possible, are exposed for a moment to scrutinise a possible enemy and then quickly withdraw.

A Rich Heiress's Pitiful Struggle to Work.

The True Story of Lucy Dodge's Life-Long Battle Against the Wealth and Luxury Unkind Fortune Showered Upon Her, and How Her Last Runaway Made Her a Winner

THE reports published broadcast throughout this country of the disappearance of Lucy Dodge, daughter of Mrs. Lionel Guest, of London, gave no inkling of her reasons for running away. At the end of five days her stepfather announced her safe return, and the incident ostensibly closed. But the reasons back of this episode in the life of this beautiful young heiress are so remarkable that one of her friends, a young English women of title, has written for this newspaper the true story of why this pampered heiress, whose social position is of the highest and whose closest friends are members of the English royal family, gave everything up in order to earn her own living. The writer's one condition was that her name be withheld.

Miss Lucy Dodge, the American Heiress Who Has Revolted So Often Against an Aristocratic Life of Luxury and Ease and Who Has at Last Won Her Fight to Be Truly Democratic.

"And off went Miss Lucy this last time, carried away literally by a musical note and waving a glad good bye to all those dukes, earls, princesses and things. This time she had won her fight to work."

London, April 22

WHEN Miss Lucy Dodge, the granddaughter of the late John Bigelow, ran away from her beautiful London home the other day, she by no means provided her family with the new and novel sensation which the general public in America and England supposed Miss Dodge, you see, has run away before, not once, but several times. Ostensibly she runs away to bring her family, which consists of a devoted mother and stepfather, to terms. Those who look on say that she formed the habit of running away in order to get her own way. Her most recent escapade was, so said her friends, for the purpose of forcing her mother to let her go into grand opera. On the surface this was the reason for the disappearance, which caused a sensation not only in this country, but all over Europe

But back of this runaway and back of all the others lies a deeper, a more compelling reason—the desire to find and to acquire true democracy. Miss Dodge was not born into a democratic family. She was born to aristocracy pure and simple. The aristocracy of wealth, culture and family. From her birth she was hedged about with all the conventions of a highly conservative family. And as she grew into young womanhood these conventions irked her even more than as a child. She hated wealth and its adjuncts, social position and snobbery.

When Miss Dodge began her running away she was a mite of a girl living in her grandfather's stately old home in Gramercy square. This was at that time such an exclusive little section of New York that no business of any kind, not even an apartment house, was allowed within its borders. This beautiful park, worth many millions, was the exclusive playground for the lucky little millionaire children whose fathers lived within the charmed quarters.

And Lucy was one of these fortunate children. Her mother was the daughter of John Bigelow, one time Ambassador to France, and one of our foremost diplomats and statesmen. After a sensational girlhood spent in France and England, where she was on the most friendly terms with the royal families, Lucy's mother married Charles Stuart Dodge and came back to New York to live. Here Lucy was born, and here, in 1903, the Dodges were divorced., Shortly afterward Mrs. Dodge married a handsome young Englishman Lionel Guest, brother of Lord Ashby St. Legers, British Paymaster-General. One of Lucy's aunts married a brother of Mrs J. Pierpont Morgan. Thus from her birth the good fairies showered Lucy with their benefits, and the word democracy was unknown in the vocabulary of the whole family.

But Lucy was not satisfied to play with the carefully selected, well washed and perfectly antiseptic children who were her neighbors. She was always trying to smuggle into the park some of the dirty but highly interesting children who lived over beyond Third avenue. Scoldings had no effect. She would point to the children and say, "Why can't I play with them? They are just like the rest of us under the dirt."

While Lucy was sure of this, her governesses and parents were sure of the contrary, and a strict watch was kept on the pretty child to protect her from the results of her democratic tendencies.

But at the age of ten, when she was voted the belle of the park and when she had more partners than she could manage at the children's parties she attended, Lucy decided that all was not right with her world. If she could not find democracy by staying in her beautiful home or in playing with the other little millionaire children, she would go in search of it and right then, and there her pilgrimage in search of democracy began.

One afternoon there was a great commotion in the Bigelow-Dodge family. Lucy had disappeared! She was not in the antiseptic park, she was nowhere in the millionaire district; where could she be? Her mother recalled that in the morning Lucy had brought three very dirty and unsanitary-looking children into the library and insisted on playing with them. She wanted to take them up to her nursery and show them how to play with her dolls. She said to her mother:

"These children have no dolls at all and I have twelve beautiful ones. It does not seem right for me to have so many. Why can't I give them some of mine ?"

When the children were sent away, Lucy wept and wailed, but nothing more was thought of it until it was time for her to go to dancing school with the other little aristocrats of the neighborhood. Then she could not be found. There was a frantic search all over the district, still no Lucy. Late in the evening, when it was thought that a general alarm would have to be sent out, Uncle Tracy came in holding a very dirty but very happy Lucy by the hand

"I found her over on Second avenue having the time of her life," said the immaculate banker-millionaire. "She would not come home until I promised her that she should have her little friends come to play with her here to-morrow."

Thus it was very early in her first pilgrimage for democracy that Lucy found one way to get her own way. From that time until she was sent away to the Bigelow estate up the Hudson, there were always half a dozen small ragamuffins in and about the Bigelow mansion. Lucy shared everything she had with them; her family was apparently helpless

Of course, all this time Lucy was too young to realize that she was searching for true democracy. She just knew that she wanted to be like the poor children who played with her

When she was twelve years of age she discovered that she had a voice Her family discovered it at the same time, and from that moment large sums of money have been spent on her training. When she started taking lessons she insisted that one of her former playmates from Second avenue should take lessons also. This request was refused. The next day Lucy was missing again. Another frantic search, this time in the district beyond the park, and she was found. But again she refused to come home without making a bargain. In a vacant lot near Eighteenth street and First avenue Lucy was found with half a dozen little boys and girls lined up in front of her, and she, as singing teacher, was putting them through the exercises that she had been taught.

"I'll come home if I can have my own way. I want Molly to take the same lessons that I do"

And, of course, the family said, "Yes, only come home without any struggle."

And now, at the age of fifteen, we find Lucy finishing her studies in New York with Molly and being gotten ready to go to Paris. She wanted Molly to go to Paris with her. But for once she could not get her own way, for once her pilgrimage for true democracy met an obstacle, and this time it was not the aristocratic Dodges and Bigelows who objected, but Molly's family. Molly had to be left at home

In Paris Lucy made her friends among the poorer students and was always sharing everything she had with them. She would take them home to luncheon on the days that her mother was entertaining royalty, and her only reply to her mother's tears was: "Surely they are as good as we are. Surely they are as good as your guests. In fact, I think they are better, for they all work for their living or intend to when they are able to."

But it was not until she was nineteen, as pretty as a picture and a debutante, that Lucy found it necessary to run away again. This time she ran away from Newport and half a dozen wealthy would-be husbands that her mother had lined up before her to choose from.

Mrs. Dodge, or Mrs. Guest, as she now was, had many friends in London before her second marriage, and her marriage added materially to this number. When Lucy made her debut, therefore, she was entertained in the most exclusive set in London. She dined with the King and Queen, and perhaps no other American girl ever received more distinguished attentions than this democratic daughter of the aristocratic Dodge-Bigelow family. But even in the midst of her triumphs Lucy pondered over the differences between herself and the people of the "other half."

"Why are we not all born equal?" she asked. "Why does one part of the people of England, for instance, bow and scrape to the other part? And the part that scrapes is so much larger than the part that is scraped to?"

While Lucy was dining with the dukes and duchesses, the lords and ladies, her pretty head was filled with such thoughts, and her mother was filled with anxiety

"Lucy will never marry, I fear; she has such queer ideas," Mrs. Guest wrote her sisters in New York.

"Send her to Newport," they replied "One season there will work wonders." And so to Newport came Mrs. Guest and her delightfully pretty daughter. Of course, Miss Dodge was a favorite from the beginning, and the same old round of dinners and dances started all over again. And the same old line of suitors bobbed up in front of her Only this time they were princes of finance rather than princes of the blood, millionaires rather than dukes and lords But the same lack of unity between the many grades of people was just as apparent, and Lucy realized that she could never settle down and be happy with any one of these aristocrats of wealth

But Mrs Guest and her aunts and cousins were at her back all the time urging her to marry, and to marry as much wealth as she could. They refused to let her alone, and, lo! one morning Lucy disappeared again. Away from would-be husbands with their millions she ran, and refused to return until her mother promised that she should marry when and whom she chose

Then Lucy returned to Newport and sang gloriously and continuously whenever her mother asked her to. But always there was a yearning to live independently of her family, and her desire increased as she heard of the things some of her former friends were doing. They looked upon her as an idler

When she went back to London she continued her music, and by this time she was very well known among the members of the musical world, professional and otherwise. She had many offers to enter the operatic world, and wept when she had to refuse them. But during the last two years these constant offers have influenced her, and she has seen dimly, perhaps, that her pilgrimage for democracy will only end when she earns her own living and becomes an economic factor. The struggle between herself and her family has been very bitter. On one side all the luxuries that wealth can provide, the highest social position and friendships of royalty. On the other, work and living among the "other half."

A few weeks ago the struggle ended Eager to test her theories that only by earning her own money could she find true democracy, Miss Lucy ran away for the last time, and by so doing threw two continents into a fever. Her other runaways had been childish, innocuous affairs unknown outside her family. This was flashed from Scotland to Rome, from New York to San Francisco

Her family, while excited, were not worried. They knew that Lucy was merely returning to the ways of her childhood, expectant that when they were ready to give in they would say, "Come home, we will be good."

But the publicity frightened her, and she sent them word where she was, adding: "Now that you know I am safe, I will stay here and take up my operatic plans."

Post haste went her stepfather to her and begged her to return. "Yes, if I may go on with my career, if I may earn my own living and pay for things out of money I have earned, not out of money other people have earned for me."

And, as of old, this method of pursuing democracy won. Her mother said yes, her uncles and aunts said yes, and next Winter Miss Lucy will be a truly wage earner. Her pilgrimage is ended

Blunders in Our Bodies That Show Nature a Bungler

IN making men, nature did her work very poorly, according to a remarkable arraignment made by Dr. Augustus Maverick, of San Antonio, Texas. Our bodies are full of examples, he declares, of how nature through carelessness brings destruction and death to its progeny

In this indictment, the doctor starts at the top and works down. The teeth in man, he points out, are by no means naturally perfect. Digestive disorders are often encouraged by this fact. As natural mischief-makers of the mouth, the wisdom teeth play the leading role.

"These are useless additions to the mouth," he says, "and in spite of their size they are never great chewers, on the other hand the pain they cause in making their debut and the trouble they so often produce, including abscess, diffuse suppuration, necrosis of the jawbone, and even cancer, is common knowledge to us all. About seventeen persons out of one hundred in our race cheat the dentist by not cutting their upper wisdom teeth; they may well consider themselves lucky."

The doctor then proceeds to criticise the tonsils, which, he says, stand up like little tombstones. "The simile, he adds, is a good one since the tonsils and the grave are closely related.

"Evidently placed by nature as sentries to guard the throat from the invasion of bacteria taken in the food, they have not only failed in their duty, but they have apparently in many people become centres of attraction for all stray germs. It is only necessary to mention the frequency of tonsilitis and the relation between tonsilitis and diseases such as rheumatism, appendicitis, sepsis, scarlet fever, diphtheria and nephritis

"Very similar to the tonsils are the adenoids so common in younger life. Here we have a natural growth of tissue, of little or no use, which on one hand plugs the breathing space and causes general ill health and deformity of the chest, and on the other hand predisposes the nose and throat to recurring catarrhal affections, including inflammation of the inner ear and deafness."

Strangely enough, the doctor has a kind word to say for the appendix, although he prefaces it with some hard knocks. It isn't as bad as it might be.

Referring to this appendage as "an antique of the salad age which is of use to no one unless the abdominal surgeon," he declares that "we certainly have no thanks to give nature for this miniature gut which, because of its low vitality and ease of strangulation, has become the target for all abdominal infections. The frequency of appendicitis is one of the bywords of our times."

But the doctor points out that about one out of every four persons has an appendix the canal of which is partially or wholly occluded, making the possibility of appendicitis less frequent or preventing it altogether.

In taking up the nervous system, the doctor "shows up" nature in finished style.

"The nerves which branch throughout the body," he says, "are often compared with telegraph wires, since they both carry messages to and fro. In making this comparison, however, it is well to remember that the wires made by man carry their messages much faster than the nerves made by nature, and that while a single telegraph wire will carry several messages at once, the nerve trunk must have a separate fiber for each

"Telegraph wires do not lie as often as nerves do Thus it is not rare to see a child with beginning pneumonia or pleurisy who has severe pain far down in the abdomen instead of over the chest, sometimes causing the surgeon to operate for appendicitis. A one-legged unfortunate will often experience pain in his amputated limb for months or years after he and his leg have parted"

The doctor points in great detail, too, how inefficiently nature designed the nervous system, certain nerves being very poorly arranged

While we value our sight next to our life, nature has left much to be desired in supplying us with proper organs. "We do not expect our eyes to see as far as a telescope, as minutely as a microscope, or as quickly as a camera," the doctor says, "but we do demand that our eyes be perfect in structure, and this they are not. The natural errors of the eyeball have caused endless gossip among eye men for years, and given many physicists a chance to rap at nature as an optician."

The doctor specifies many of the faults possessed by our eyes, and which he says are a great handicap to our sight, and if we did not have two eyes instead of one and were not constantly changing our glance, we would not be able to get along as well as we do.

HOW LAWLESS SUFFRAGETTES WOULD SOON BE SUPPRESSED IN AMERICA.

Maud Malone, First American Militant Suffragette to Test the Law in New York, and What the Supreme Court Has Just Decided About "Wild Women"

THE question is often asked, "What would be done to the militant suffragettes if they started in on a campaign of lawlessness in America as they have in England?"

And this question can now be answered, at least for New York, because the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court has settled the matter in no uncertain terms.

The court has no fault to find with the worthy movement in favor of woman suffrage. In fact, the judges take pains to point out distinctly that "thoughtful men and women recognize that the principle of woman suffrage is supported by cogent arguments." But wanton lawlessness cannot be excused because of the plea that it is in behalf of a meritorious cause.

A young woman in Brooklyn, Maud Malone, took it upon herself to interrupt a political meeting last Fall, when President Wilson was speaking. Like her misguided English friends, this American militant suffragette had a notion that she would get her name into the papers and probably escape any serious consequences for a disorderly act. She was promptly arrested, dragged out of the meeting, taken to court and fined for disorderly conduct.

This was quite a shock to Maud Malone, and she and her friends appealed the case. The Appellate Division has just handed down a pretty severe rebuke to Maud Malone, confirming her conviction and warning other lawless suffragettes that the law will make no exceptions because they are fighting for "Votes for Women."

Thus it is pretty well settled that the sort of disturbances which are delaying the true progress of woman suffrage in England would be promptly dealt with by the courts if attempted in America. But the question still remains as to what the authorities would do if the American jails should become filled with lawless suffragettes who went on a hunger strike. On this matter Sheriff Harburger said to a reporter of this newspaper:

"There is little fear that militant suffragettes, if there be any such female outlaws in these United States, would dare to commit the atrocities they are undertaking in England. If any such uprisings did occur here, however, we would lose little time in jailing the offenders and subjecting them to the strictest discipline.

"Regarding the treatment of militants behind the bars, there are just three courses: (1) Permit them to starve themselves to death (and good riddance it would be); (2) feed them forcibly; (3) release them after self-starvation had reached the danger point.

"It is eminently inhuman to allow these women to starve themselves, and we would never permit such a procedure in this country. On the other hand, it does absolutely no good to release a woman, for she would take her release as a precedent and defy the law all her life.

"Forcible feeding is the only alternative we should resort to.

"But I want to put myself on record as being in favor of giving women the vote. What I take exception to is misbehavior and rioting by perverted females. Then they should be treated the same as men and be made to suffer."

John J. Fallon, Warden of the Tombs, took the same viewpoint as Sheriff Harburger. He said:

"Any militant suffragettes that were jailed and placed under my charge I would feed forcibly. But I would first have them all examined by expert alienists to decide whether they should serve their term in prison or be sent to the insane asylum.

"Under no conditions would we release a woman who refused to eat. They would only laugh at us after they got out, and the first thing we knew everybody in the jail would start the same game in an attempt to be set free.

"If the women offer stubborn resistance to manhandling, we can give them nourishment by injections. But they soon tire of this, and the first thing we know we find them eating their food in spite of themselves. Again, a woman can generally be brought to terms by refusing to give her water except on the condition that she eat the food we put before her."

William J. Wright, Commissioner of the Department of Correction of New York, under whose care convicted suffragettes would come, had this to say:

"Under no conditions do I believe that refusal to take food should be an excuse for the liberation of obstreperous militants. Such a procedure would never remedy matters. Neither would I sanction the barbarous method of allowing the fanatics to starve themselves. Of the two means of forcible feeding I would [illegible] advocate cramming nourishment down a woman's throat, but would be inclined to try injections at first. The records show that stubborn subjects who refuse the regular food soon tire of existing on injections. Through sheer monotony and the weakening effects of unrewarded rebellion against nature, they submit eventually in practically all cases."

The decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court dealing with Maud Malone and her exploit was written by Presiding Justice Jenks and unanimously concurred in by the full bench. Among other things it says:

"I think that the disturbance by the defendant was wilful. For that qualification as used in the statute means that the disturbance was not due to accident or mistake, but was intentional and designed. (Commonwealth v. Porter, supra; Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154-156; Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 68.) The defendant is apparently an intelligent woman of excellent antecedents and of good social position.

"After she had testified as to her familiarity with political meetings and as to her frequent utterance at them, she was asked the following questions:

"'Q. Did you not see that Governor Wilson had refused and that by persisting and remaining standing you were disturbing the meeting and preventing its continuance, in face of the fact that the speaker had refused to discuss it any further with you? Did you not see that?'

"'A. If I might explain I asked the question to get an answer either one way or the other, and just refusing to discuss the question is not an answer.'

"'Q. Did you feel that you had a right, notwithstanding the refusal of the speaker to answer your question directly, to remain there, and, notwithstanding the protest of the chairman of the meeting, to continue to stand in your position insisting upon it being answered?'

"'A. There were a great many people in the meeting that wanted me to stand and get an answer, and I wanted an answer either way.'

"'Q. And it was your determination to stay there until you got one whether he liked it or not, is that it?'

"'A. Well, I asked the Governor then why he declined to answer, and then I was immediately dragged out.'

"The defendant avoided direct answers. But I find, not in the avoidance alone, but in the answers as given, indication that the intent of the defendant was to set the chairman and the speaker at defiance until she was satisfied.

"She would explain or would extenuate her conduct by the statement that after she asked the Governor why he declined to answer she was immediately 'dragged out.' But, even so, she was out of order and a disturber as soon as the speaker had refused to discuss the question any further and the chairman had requested her to cease and to sit down. She testifies that she did hear the chairman tell her to resume her seat.

"Even if the trial court believed her, that circumstance would not acquit her, for she testifies that the speaker, after his answer to her first question, answered her second question by a declination to discuss the subject; she admits that she persisted to question him further upon the same subject and that she theretofore had heard the chairman say that he would not have the meeting interrupted and that he would have the meeting come to order.

"We have no concern with the wisdom of the proceedings which led to the defendant's arrest, arraignment and trial. We are told in eloquent periods that the conduct of the defendant was in furtherance of a cause in which she believes. I do not doubt her belief. Neither do I doubt that the most militant suffragists, who are producing a reign of domestic terror in England, some of whose actions almost rival those of the petroleuses of the Parisian Commune of 1871, may say the same in all conscience.

"Thoughtful men and women recognize that the principle of woman suffrage is supported by cogent arguments. The arguments should receive due consideration, and the agitation of the subject should not be stifled by any oppression. But there is no argument in violations of law, and agitation in forms that fall foul of the penal law must be suppressed. If the courts overlook violations of such law for the sake of such propagandism of any cause as is in disobedience of such law, the courts fall into contempt and the lawless take heart.

"What this defendant did is but a little thing in itself, but it is not pardonable in the eye of the law. If the law should blink at little things which are unlawful, irresponsible enthusiasts may be encouraged to commit grave offenses. In the oft-quoted maxim, 'This is a government of laws, not men,' 'men' includes women. There is no question of free speech or of oppression involved in this case, and it does not bulk large with incidental questions of liberty. There is but the simple question whether the defendant—a person—wilfully disturbed a meeting in violation of the statute. The judgment and conviction must be affirmed."

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY---By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty

No. 224—Keep Your Hair Alive

I SEE more hair that is dead or dying than is thoroughly alive. Keep your hair alive. Keep it vital, glowing with life force.

How? How do you keep your muscles alive, your heart and lungs and brain and liver from dying? By exercise. Well, then, let your hair have air and exercise.

My eyes, grown keen in much appraising of women's looks, have told me that much of the hair I see piled high or tightly bound around women's heads, knows little of air. It is like a chamber, the windows of which are never opened, and which receives such ventilation as it gets by the accidents of gaps between the windows and the window sills, cracks beneath the door and in the floors. The owners of such hair never seem to consider its need of ventilation. Its only contact with life-giving, strength-growing air is on the occasions, once or twice a month, of a shampoo, whereas the hair needs its daily airing as much as do we. Every time the hair is brushed, and this should be at least once a day, let the air pass thoroughly through it. To accomplish this lift the hair strand by strand slowly, and let it fall again. Seize the strands near the roots and gently shake them. Run your fingers through the hair, combing it coarsely, so to speak, with the fingers. All these are good means for ventilation, but the best is to sit near a window when the weather is sufficiently balmy and let the air blow through it.

Besides air the hair requires exercise. Letting it hang for twenty minutes to a half-hour exercises it by the slight strain of the weight of the hair on the roots. Form the habit of letting your hair down for its exercise whenever you are alone in your apartments, if only for ten minutes or a quarter-hour. Other exercises, that of massage, it should have every day. Let your aim be to keep the skin of the scalp free and moving easily over the skull. If the hair is very dry dip the fingers with which you massage the scalp into lanoline or vaseline or olive oil. If it is oily dip them into cold water, but be sure to rub the scalp until the moisture has been well dried in. I believe in slightly pulling the hair now and then. It prevents tightening of the scalp and gives the hair roots exercise, stimulating the circulation and preventing that shrinking of the hair root which causes falling of the hair.

This massage and ventilation of the scalp hinder the accumulation of dandruff, which, if it accumulates in large quantities, causes the hair to dry and fall and is even one of the causes of the hair turning gray. While I believe in moderate brushings as part of the daily toilet of the hair, I do advise moderation in it. If the constitution of the hair is strong it will bear vigorous brushing. If not, and the hairs are weak, a strong brushing will kill the new hairs. Adapt your treatment to your hair.

Do not fix upon a certain time to take a shampoo and follow that rule as though it were part of your religion. Wash the hair as you wash your linen, when it is soiled. Your hair brush is the best guide to that condition. When each brushing leaves a deep, dusty deposit in the bristles it is time for a shampoo whether the last one was yesterday or last month.

Washing the hair in warm water with a teaspoonful of castile soap shavings that have been melted down to jelly is a simple and generally satisfactory means of shampoo. Rinsing is more important than washing, for if you do not remove every particle of soap by repeated rinsings the hair will rot. After towelling the hair awhile until the first dampness is removed I always rub a cooling tonic into the scalp.

This shampoo has a tonic as well as cleansing effect:

Cream of tartar	1 oz.
Bay rum	2 ozs.
Castile soap (melted)	2 ozs.
Lukewarm water	3 ozs.

This shampoo is much used by blondes who desire that their hair remain light and fluffy, one ingredient, the bicarbonate of soda, performing both offices.

Filtered water	1 pt.
Shavings of castile soap	3 ozs.
Bicarbonate of soda	2 ozs.

Warm and rub well through the hair.

These lotions, cooling, cleansing and growth-promoting, may be rubbed into the scalp while the hair is drying:

Tincture of arnica	3 ozs.
Tincture of cinchona	3 ozs.
Jaborandi leaves	½ oz.

This pilocarpine lotion is valuable for the same use:

Eau de cologne	100 grams
Glycerine	10 grams
Tincture of cantharides	5 grams
Nitrate of pilocarpine	25 grams

To prevent hair falling [illegible]:

Strong black tea	1 pint
Alcohol	½ pint

Rub the scalp with it every other day, alternating with massage with arnica oil.

This is one of the best of dandruff removers:

Boiling water	1 pint
Powdered borax	1 teaspoonful
Brandy	½ teaspoonful

Rub this well into the scalp.

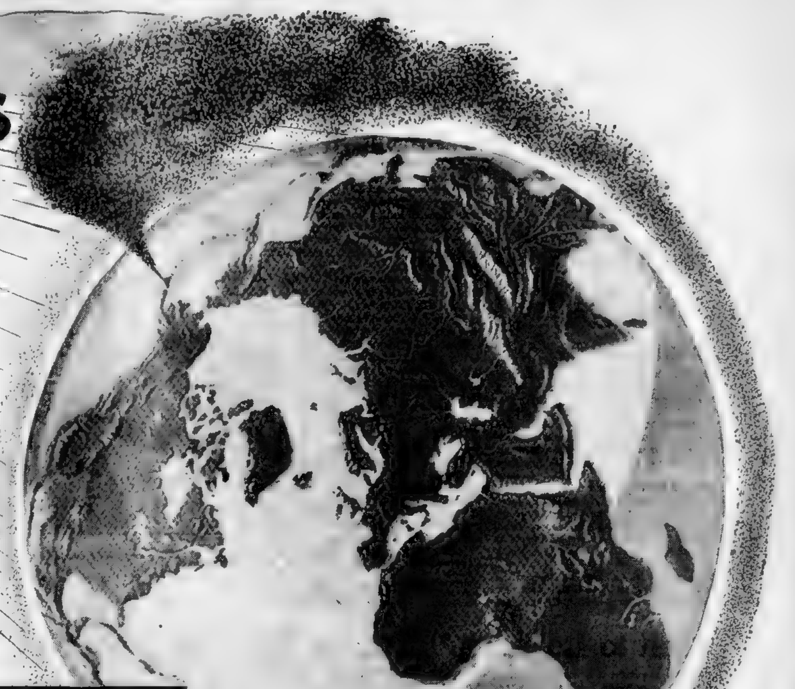
HOW VOLCANOES MAKE COLD SUMMERS

The Startling New Discovery of Science That the Millions of Tons of Dust Thrown Up by Our Alaskan Volcano Katmai Spread All Around the World and Reduced the Sun's Heat 10 Per Cent in 1912



How the Great Alaskan Volcano Katmai Threw Up Millions of Tons of Ashes Which Drifting Around the Earth in the Highest Stratum of Our Atmosphere Formed a Barrier to the Sun's Rays, Threw Ten Per Cent of Its Heat Back Into Space and So Caused the Cold Summer of 1912.

THAT cold years are due to volcanic dust is the curious discovery made by Professor C. G. Abbot, Director of the Astrophysical Laboratory of the Smithsonian Institution, of Washington.

His conclusions are published in a pamphlet called "Volcanoes and Climate," just issued by this institution.

From this it appears that the remarkably cool Summer which we experienced last year must be attributed to volcanic dust.

The professor made this discovery while observing the sun at Bassour, Algeria, for the purpose of comparing temperatures with those taken at Mount Wilson, California. He was working on the hypothesis that the amount of heat given off from the sun's surface varies in different years. While this hypothesis has not been disproved, it has been considerably modified by his recent observations.

He was puzzled to observe a very persistent reddish haze in the sky above Bassour. Observation showed that it could not be a vapor cloud. Reports from Mount Wilson informed him that a similar haze was visible there. Investigation proved that this could only be due to the tremendous eruption of Mount Katmai, near Alaska, which occurred on June 6, 1912.

A long series of intricate calculation indicated that the volcanic dust in the atmosphere reduced the amount of heat received from the sun by about 10 per cent. [illegible] produce a fall [illegible] Fahrenheit, perhaps five or [illegible] from the mean average [illegible] of the year.

"From our Bassour (Algeria) experiments," writes Professor Abbot in his report, "including the measurements by two methods of the radiation of the sky, it appears that the quantity of heat available to warm the earth was diminished by nearly, or quite, 10 per cent by the haze. There is, however, some indication that this was in part counterbalanced by a decrease in the earth's radiation to space, caused by the haze."

One method of measuring the heat was by the spectro-bolometer, invented by the late Professor Langley. This instrument shows by spectroscopy the amount of heat abstracted from a pure ray of sunlight by the atmosphere and all the substances in it.

Professor Abbot calculated that the amount of heat ordinarily lost in Summer by radiation to space was 0.05 calories per square centimetre per minute, while during the prevalence of the volcanic dust it was 0.28 calories, showing a loss of 0.20 calories to the earth through this cause.

Volcanic dust now appears to be the chief factor in causing cold years. Hitherto the variation in sun spots has been regarded as the determining factor. The sun spots go through an eleven-year cycle of increase and decrease. It has been noticed that there is a fall from the average temperature at the point of maximum sun spots. The year 1912, however, was not a year of maximum sun spots, and this strengthens the evidence that the fall of temperature was due to volcanic dust. The fall was much greater than has usually been found to occur in years of maximum sun spots.

The loss of heat is, of course, due to the interposition of a layer of minute floating solid particles which prevent a certain proportion of the sun's rays from reaching the earth.

The effect of the volcanic dust is very much intensified if it prevails shortly before the beginning of Winter or just after that season. In that case it would cause an abnormal accumulation of ice and snow and an unnatural prolongation of Winter. Fortunately, this coincidence did not occur in 1912. Volcanic dust clouds may prevail for many months, and it seems quite possible that if they should come at the end of a long and severe Winter they might create a practically all-the-year Winter.

That would be a calamity of worldwide magnitude. It would mean the failure of the crops over the whole of the United States and all the temperate regions of the earth.

It seems clear from Professor Abbot's observations that there is no form of terrestrial disturbance which is so farreaching in its effects as volcanic dust. Within a week or less of a great volcanic eruption in America the dust is observed in Europe. The dust often travels at a speed of forty miles an hour, or 960 miles a day. That means that in fifteen days it will have gone half way around the world.

From the moment of the eruption the effect on our climate begins to be felt and in less than a month that of the whole world shows the influence of the disturbance.

We should remember that even at ordinary times a large proportion of the sun's heat and light is lost to us. We should perish instantly if we were exposed to the unfiltered heat of the sun. It is the reflection of the sun's light from particles of dust and water vapor that gives us the beautiful and welcome phenomenon we call the sky. In so-called cloudless countries the sunlight is very difficult to endure, and even there the atmosphere is by no means free from particles of dust and water vapor.

When, however, the atmosphere is filled with an almost continuous pall of red dust, the dilution of the sunlight is carried much farther than is agreeable or healthy. Such occurrences suggest the possibility that they may some day take a much more alarming form than they have yet done. The material thrown up by the volcanoes varies very much in composition. Is it not possible that through certain chemical combinations and the composition of the earth where the eruption occurs, the material ejected may take the form of a heavy poisonous gas?

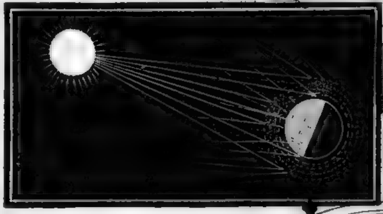


Diagram Illustrating How the Tiny Particles of Dust Thrown Up by Volcanoes Obstruct the Sun's Rays and Turn One in Ten Back Into Space, Depriving Earth of That Much Light and Heat.

Now the ability of one volcano to throw a shower of solid particles over more than half the earth's surface has been amply demonstrated. If this material should be changed into a poisonous gas it would extinguish the life of most, or perhaps all, of the human inhabitants of the globe. It is evident that science is increasingly disposed to accept the probability of such a catastrophe occurring from one cause or another.

Bodies Covered with Volcanic Ash After the Disastrous Eruption of Mont Pelee, in Martinique.

After observing the presence of dust from Mount Katmai in tremendously separated parts of the world, Professor Abbot made a study of the temperature in connection with all periods of great volcanic activity during the past century. He found that in every year of great volcanic activity there had been a less than normal temperature. He also found that in all these years there were reports of "hazes," "dry fogs" and curious atmospheric disturbances in places far apart. The relation of these to one volcanic centre was not generally understood and their effect on climate was entirely overlooked.

There were periods of diminished heat from 1883 to 1887, from 1888 to 1893, and from 1902 to 1904. These were all periods of great volcanic activity. The last named period, for instance, was begun by the terrible eruption of Mount Pelee, on the island of Martinique, which was followed by that of La Soufriere on the Island of St. Vincent.

Professor Abbot has collected an impressive mass of facts showing the stupendous quantities of material thrown up by volcanoes. We are impressed by the historical fact that Pompeii and Herculanium were buried under a shower of lava, mud and ashes from Vesuvius, but that is only an imperfect indication of the power and activity of a volcano, for those towns are but a mile or two from the crater.

One of the greatest eruptions on record is said to have been that of Mount Asamayama, in Japan, in 1783. The matter it threw up formed an island in a river which is known at the present day. The dust darkened the air for months and was observed in many parts of the world, although its source was not recognized. That was an exceptionally cold year.

That year was marked by an eruption of nearly equal violence to that in Japan. This second eruption occurred at the volcano of Shaptar Jokull, in Iceland. Half a mountain was blown away by this eruption.

The dust thrown up by these eruptions was noticed all over Europe and in parts of Africa. It was described in many places as "a dry fog," and the idea that it was a fog coincided with the coldness of the weather. Benjamin Franklin, our earliest American scientist, who was in Paris at the time, commented on the presence of this peculiar haze and the annoyance it caused him. He attributed an attack of bronchitis to it.

The year 1883 was remarkable for great volcanic disturbances, and at that time the extraordinarily wide distribution of the dust was noticed. Around Babuian, in Southeastern Asia, the sun was hidden for three weeks. There was no thickness of the atmosphere at the surface of the earth, the obstruction being high up in the air.

When the darkness cleared somewhat the sun appeared green, although at other times volcanic dust has been found to be purple. A tremendous eruption occurred at Krakatoa, in the South Pacific, in the same year and was attended by similar phenomena. The dust reached Europe within ten days and caused considerable obscuration of the sun.

The eruption of Krakatoa is regarded as one of the most terrible in history because 40,000 persons lost their lives in it. The eruption blew away nearly half the island and crevices a thousand feet deep were left where once there had been mountains.

The report was heard 3,000 miles away and the darkness caused by the dust extended over 720,000 square miles.

Many remarkable eruptions escape notice because they are not attended with great loss of life or damage to property. An eruption in Guatemala in 1902 spread ashes over an area of 1,500 square miles. The dust cloud above the crater was [illegible] miles high, a very significant indication of the force of the eruption.

Although the eruption of Mount Katmai has attracted comparatively little attention, because it occurred far away from thickly peopled regions, it was, nevertheless, of a most tremendous character. There is every reason to believe that the eruption of Mount Pelee, which caused such universal distress, was but a trifling natural disturbance compared to that of Mount Katmai. This latter eruption deposited a foot of ashes a hundred miles away. When it is remembered that this deposit was spread for at least that distance in every direction the enormous quantity may be gauged.

The column of dust above the crater was estimated to be thirty miles high. The United States revenue cutter Manning witnessed the eruption from a distance of 100 miles from the volcano. The sky became completely dark for twenty-four hours and the deck was piled up with volcanic dust to such a depth that the men had great difficulty in freeing the ship from the burden.

The dust was observed by Professor Abbot in Africa, 6,000 miles away, eleven days after the eruption and at Mount Weather, Virginia, 3,700 miles away, within four days. It was not seen at Mount Wilson, California, 2,500 miles from Katmai, until fifteen days after the eruption, because the prevailing air currents do not blow in that direction. The dust moves with the upper air currents.

How "Squaw Men" Add to England's Woman Troubles

THE Fabian Society of England—of which George Bernard Shaw is the distinguished head—is taking a census of the growing army of "Squaw Men" in that country—husbands who loaf while their wives labor to support them. The suspicion is that the rapid increase of this type of male creature is largely responsible for the growing violence of militant suffragettism.

Mrs. C. M. Wilson, of the Fabians, who is investigating the matter, has this to say:

"The object of the Fabian women's group is to study as thoroughly as possible the economic position of women in this country.

"So little is known at present about the number of wage-earning women who support others that we are making special inquiries into the subject.

"I have as yet no definite figures, but I should say that there are many thousands of women in this country who support husbands or other relatives.

"These women are to be found among all classes and in all professions and trades. Some of these wives are skilled workers, and take up their position as bread winners quite cheerfully.

"It is very difficult to ascertain details of the better class homes where husbands, for some reason or other, are supported by their wives.

"Among poorer people, however—particularly in the districts around the East London docks—I know there are hundreds of cases where the wife is the wage-earner of the home.

"The numbers of women who work to support not only husbands but fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers and other relatives, must be amazing!

"I have heard of poor little domestics who have given away nearly all their money every month to keep some home going, while there are numerous instances of elder sisters who have bravely gone out to business in order to bring up a troop of small brothers and sisters.

"Women workers with idle or invalid husbands have practically the same financial responsibilities as a man, and are looked upon by the State as the official wage-earners."

According to the statistics issued and assuming the economic conditions to be unchanged, New York, it is claimed, will contain [illegible] women workers and 300,000 husbands and fathers of families of the idle, never-work class by the year 1923!

WHAT School CHILDREN SHOULD Be Given to EAT

How Their Health Is Frequently Destroyed by Allowing Them to Choose Their Food

By EUGENE CHRISTIAN, F.S.D.

THE child, from the age of about four to twelve years, seems to have been forgotten. After a child has emerged from the infant to the youth, and can romp and play and get out of doors, it becomes healthy, largely from fresh air and exercise, and usually has such an accommodating and ravenous appetite that it can eat almost anything without apparent harm. This is why the diet of the youth has been overlooked.

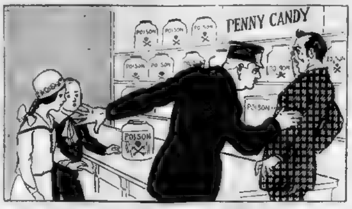
After its second birthday the average mother begins to feed the child from the general family table. She passes along to it all of her inherited errors. Pickles, acid fruits and starches, white bread raised with soda and baking powder, tea, coffee, sweets in abundance, are given to it without thought or consideration.

If the child can get out and play in the sunshine and fresh air it may digest all these things, seemingly without trouble, but in thousands of cases the digestion is ruined, assimilation of food becomes imperfect, intestinal congestion (constipation) appears, and the whole process of metablism, or building up from foods, is deranged before the child reaches its sixth birthday. Then motherly instinct assumes charge, it is kept indoors—kept quiet—its clothing, exercise and all of its habits are guarded with a great deal of care, except its diet, which is the one fundamental thing which controls its health.

Children are naturally healthier than their parents. The trend of nature is always upwards toward higher forms of life, therefore if the principle of natural evolution were not, in some way interfered with, children, with very few exceptions, would be perfectly healthy and by getting out and exercising the play instinct the comparative death rate would be very much lower than among adults, but they are not. The death rate among children from two to six years of age is appalling

The child's taste or desire for certain things cannot be trusted. All children crave sweets, and they can digest and assimilate more of these than the average grown person, but their craving leads them far beyond the amount needed, and every penny weight they eat, in excess of the amount needed, makes trouble.

Cheap confections are a menace to the health of children. Most "penny candy" ought to be marked "poison," and dealers and manufacturers who use poisonous adulterations in these things ought to be put in the penitentiary, for they are weakening and poisoning the greatest asset of the nation.



"Most penny candy should be marked 'POISON,' and the dealers and manufacturers put in the penitentiary."

Cheap confections and the over-eating of sweets are the most prolific cause of children's diseases. These things keep the stomach in a constant state of irritation, thus lowers the vitality, destroys the red corpuscles of the blood, and when any disease appears the child has no power of resistance

The natural craving for sweets can be satisfied with such things as dates, figs and raisins, and now and then pure maple sugar or good home-made ice cream, but these things should be administered sparingly, and only at meal times, and the amount given then should be governed by the time they spend in the open air and the temperature of the atmosphere. Children can withstand a great amount of cold and when allowed to play out of doors they will be comfortable in zero weather, thinly clad, compared with the amount of clothing worn by grown people

The only purpose clothing should serve is bodily warmth. When it is made the instrument of foolish decoration it is serving the same purpose as rings in the ears and bells on the toes, and the mind of the mother thus afflicts her child is in the same class as that of of the ignorant barbarian whom she imitates

When the child enters school food is by far the most important thing to be considered, and yet this is the one thing that receives no especial attention. There is no time in life when so much care should be exercised in feeding as during the school days, because there is no time when the appetite so runs riot and so many mistakes are made

The food of the school child serves two distinct purposes: (1) material for growth; (2) material for the extra mental work and worry.

The child mind will not labor except under compulsion or necessity. All early education, therefore, is a system of forcing things. This extreme demand upon the body must be provided for. The body of the growing child, especially when in school, will appropriate a much greater amount of carbohydrates (starch and sugar) than that of the grown person.

The diet of the school child should be confined to the most easily dissolved proteids, such as milk and eggs, and coarse cereals such as whole wheat, rye, corn-hominy, and the coarse fibrous vegetables. They should also eat a liberal portion of fruits between meals, never with meals, and if the weather is cold and they are exposed to the outdoor air, they can eat bountifully of fats, such as nuts, butter and olive oil.

The following are a few suggestions for the diet of the school child ranging from seven to ten years of age.

Breakfast.

Whole wheat, or some whole wheat product, cooked very thoroughly with butter or cream (no sugar). An egg and a glass or two of milk. If the weather is very cold a few dates might be eaten with the cereal, or a few figs or raisins eaten with cream.

Luncheon.

Two very ripe bananas, a few dates, figs or raisins, with nuts or nut butter and cream. Two or three glasses of milk

Note.—Bananas should not be eaten until they are "dead ripe," which is indicated by black spots on the skin. The banana is not a fruit, but a vegetable, and one of the finest specimens grown.

Dinner.

One or two fresh vegetables.

Choice of potato, sweet or white, baked beans or whole wheat bread

Choice milk, eggs or fish, giving preference to milk or eggs

Now and then a service of home-made ice cream or maple sugar might be served with either luncheon or dinner. In Summer the sweets and cereals should be decreased and the vegetables, bananas and milk might be increased.

Children, especially the school child, should not be allowed to take acid fruit or sugar for breakfast unless all bread and cereals be omitted. Acid fruit sugar and cereal starch is about the worst combination of foods that could be put together.

What to Do for a Victim of ELECTRICAL SHOCK

A PERSON who has suffered a severe electrical shock and is unconscious, needs prompt attention, just as a person needs it who has been taken unconscious from the water. In fact the method of first aid to a victim of electrical shock is a great deal like the work of resuscitation of a nearly drowned person.

The National Electric Light Association has adopted what is known as the "prone pressure" method of resuscitation. The American Medical Association has also adopted this method. It has been recognized that shocks from low voltage currents of from 110 to 500 volts are usually extremely serious

The method which is usually applied in cases of drowning or asphyxiation from any cause serves well in electrical shock cases. There are really five important points in this work:

Starting respiration as speedily as possible
The position of the victim
The position of the operator
The method of operation
The speed and the length of the operation

The victim should be taken at once to a place where the air is reasonably pure and where it is possible to work over him, but no time should be lost in seeking such a place. If it is not actually at hand, do the next best thing by working on the premises, for no time should be lost. A delay of one minute in beginning to restore respiration may prove fatal.

The victim must be turned over on his stomach, but with his face to one side, so that his nose and mouth are free to the air, and if any foreign substances are in his mouth or throat they must be removed Whoever is working over the victim should kneel beside him, facing the victim's head. He then spreads the palms of the hands upon the lower ribs of the victim, holding his arms out straight to secure better force.

Resuscitation begins by a moderate pressure on the ribs, increased at the end of the pressure, then the pressure is quickly removed by swinging the elbows apart. It is better to have some one hold a watch on this operation, giving three seconds for the downward pressure and two seconds of release. This should be continued for at least three hours if the victim does not begin to breathe. After three hours of painstaking work with no results the case is hopeless, but anywhere within the three hours the breathing is likely to begin, when, with care, the life of the victim is saved

It is well to have a helper to take the place of the first worker, as his pressures will become weak and irregular in spite of careful timing after a half hour. Let the helper get in position, and upon the release by the first worker, take up the pressures, giving the first man opportunity to rest.

Of course, if a physician is handy and orders a different method after a trial of this, it is best to allow him to take charge. Unless the shock is extremely severe the chances are always favorable for a recovery. The proper speed of respiration is twelve times a minute, and in the excitement care should be taken that this is not increased, as this is very likely to happen Others may loosen the clothes of the victim, but the man working over him should lose no time in this manner, the first great need being to start the breathing. After recovering consciousness the victim should be made to lie perfectly quiet for a long while, as his heart has become greatly weakened A sudden effort might mean a relapse, and it is extremely difficult to save a victim if this occurs.

Why a "Clucking" Hen Is Just Right to Eat

IT has been found upon careful demonstration that the best fowl for food is a hen that nature has fitted for the siege of setting for a period of three weeks on a nest full of eggs and for the several weeks required for the hen to mother her brood

A clucking hen eats more grain than other hens for several days prior to the time she begins to want to set in real earnest.

The last few eggs she lays prior to remaining on the nest are richer and sweeter than those laid earlier in her laying period

The body of the hen is more plump, and the breast and limbs are filled out, and the hen that will weigh six pounds during the earlier portion of her laying period will weigh at least a pound more when she has finished her laying, and is ready to set.

The same kind of a fowl killed and dressed in the same manner and prepared for the table in the same way at different times from the day she begins to lay, up to the day she is through laying and ready to begin to hatch her brood, will show a great difference.

The fowl killed and eaten while she is in her early stage of laying is tasteless compared to the hen used for food that is clucking lustily, even if the exact methods are used in preparing and serving the fowl.

Those who are prejudiced and who have always thought there could be no such difference should try the experiment to be fully convinced. Some persons will pay a higher price for a clucking hen simply to secure a more delicious morsel of food

There is really no secret why a clucking hen is better food than any other sort. The hen knows she has a long siege of three weeks when she must sit on her eggs and cannot get either exercise or very much food for she sticks to her nest. And having been made by nature to know this the hen carefully prepares for the siege by putting herself in the very best of physical condition. She lays in a supply of food that will, with the aid of a little hasty feeding now and then, enable her to go through the sitting process without hunger.

Keep Your GARDEN PATHS Well SALTED

HOW many times in mid-summer we see what would be an otherwise beautiful garden of flowers and shrubs marred and made unattractive because the foliage is covered with dust, and even the flowers seem to droop in shame of so much dust about them.

Watering at night and in the morning will wash most of this dust away, but not all of it, and again during the middle of the day when everything is hot and dusty and when we need more than at any other time to see the garden in all the freshness of its greenery, the cool, green effect is spoiled by another layer of dust.

All this may be avoided by a plentiful use of common salt, the coarse granular sort, not the crystal or rock salt. Sprinkle this salt over your garden paths, taking care not to allow it to fall unevenly along the border, and soon it will be found that no dust will arise through it. What little moisture there is in the ground will keep the salt moist enough to prevent dust from arising through it, and a plentiful supply of this salt on the edges of the path will prevent the grass and weeds from growing in and making it unsightly.

Brick, cement or other artificial covering paths do not add beauty to a garden. Nothing is in better keeping with a garden than clean-bordered paths of semi-hard, natural soil. The use of salt will keep such paths smooth and practically dustless.

In France salt has been found so valuable for this that it is even used on highways. On such roads and streets as are frequently broken by flag-stone crossings, or have street car tracks, a tar covering cannot be used, as it cannot be spread over the tracks nor over the flagstones. On such streets great quantities of salt have been placed, with the result that these streets are practically dustless, even more dustless than tar-covered macadamized roads, where the dust gathers on top of this covering.

Another advantage is that the salt can be watered freely without injury, as it only dissolves a little and adheres to the soil in small crystals, so that it is not necessary to make very frequent applications of it.

Mosquito Netting for Baby.

IT is said white mosquito netting over a baby's crib or carriage will hurt its eyes and that green is better, but white is safer because many of the green nettings are poisonous and baby frequently gets the netting in his mouth.

Floor Stains.

WHEN hot fat is spilled on a floor the first impulse is to pour on hot water. Do not do this, as it keeps the fat melted and allows it to sink into the wood Pour could water, a lot of it, and the fat will harden before it sinks in. Then it can be removed by scraping it up.

Relief from Burns.

BAKING soda gives instant relief to a burn or a scald. Applied either wet or dry to the burned part immediately, the sense of relief is magical. It seems to withdraw the heat, and with it the pain.

TO test eggs, put them in water. A fresh egg will sink, a poor egg will float midway and a bad egg will float on the surface.

How to Tell the Bite of a VENOMOUS SNAKE

IF you should be so unfortunate as to be bitten by a snake and were not quite certain what sort of a snake it was, whether poisonous or of the so-called harmless variety, look at the injury.

If there are four punctures, or even three, the chances are that it was not a venomous snake but if there are only two punctures it is probable you have been bitten by an extremely poisonous snake

While this does not always hold good, as a non-poisonous snake may have had opportunity to make only two incisions with his four biting teeth, it is best to take no chances at all.

The poisonous snake's deadly fangs are but two—generally in the upper jaw. But, no matter what sort of a snake bites you, the head of that snake should, wherever possible, be kept for identification.

If, as is generally the case, the bite is on an extremity, tie one or more ligatures—preferably of broad rubber bands—above the injury. Incise deeply, cutting across the puncture for at least one inch and well beyond the depth reached by the fang. Next, wash it in running water, manipulating the part to promote free bleeding. If running water is not available, suck the wound, then rinse the mouth thoroughly with a solution of potassium permanganate. Now wash the wound well, and use in and around it the potassium permanganate solution; or inject a 1 to 100 solution of chromic acid, being careful to infiltrate completely, not only the wound, but also the surrounding tissues.

Do not give ammonia. Stimulate with small doses of whiskey, if indicated, but do not overdose, as more persons have been killed by taking large quantities of whiskey than by snake bite.

When positively certain that the poison has been removed from the wound, loosen cautiously the ligatures, that nearest the heart first, but do not remove them, so they may be again tightened if symptoms recur. In all cases the victim must have the best surgical care, and the wound should be kept open by packing with wet antiseptic gauze, as sepsis and local gangrene are very apt to follow the injury.

If Your Baby Swallows a Penny

CHILDREN often swallow such things as open safety pins, screws and coins without harm. In due time they travel through the stomach and bowels. Do not administer cathartics, but give the child plenty of coarse food—oatmeal, potatoes and bran biscuits. In these days of the X-ray machine it is best to take the child to your doctor, who will locate the foreign body and make sure it is not in a place where it will do harm.

Foreign bodies in the eye, if they have not penetrated any part of the eyeball, are best removed by pulling the lid away from the eyeball with the finger, so that the tears will flow and wash the particle away. Never rub the eye. When the eyeball is penetrated, you cannot see an oculist too quickly.

If you know a child has swallowed something, but he is too young to tell you what it is, take no chances at all, but see a physician. The chances are he will have the little one put under the X-Ray. The safest way is the only sure way, and one cannot be too careful in cases of this sort.

The LAW ABOUT FRUIT Hanging CVER YOUR FENCE

IF your neighbor has a pear, apple, plum or cherry tree so close to the line that many of the branches hang over the fence or dividing line and reach out above your own land, there are a number of things you may legally do. There are also a number of things you may not legally do

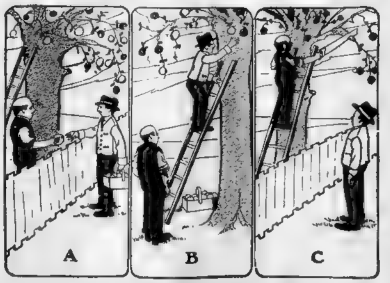
Probably neither boundary disputes nor neighboring hens nor anything else has caused so much trouble and hard feelings and court quarrels as this question of who owns the fruit that hangs over on your land although attached to a tree growing on your neighbor's property.

In the first place, the general mistake made is that such fruit belongs to you. This is the very first thing to learn. It does not belong to you. But you may do several things about it. You may refuse to allow the neighbor to step on your land to gather that fruit, you may refuse to allow him to climb the limbs that extend over your land, you may refuse to allow him to shake the fruit down on your land. But always remember this: If you refuse to allow him to come on your property to gather the fruit, you must gather it for him and give it to him if he asks you to do so.

If you demand your "rights" and want to be very unreasonable and actually despicable about it you can make your neighbor cut off every limb, branch and twig that extends over your land

On the other hand, if you refuse to allow this neighbor to come on your land and at the same time refuse to gather the fruit on these branches when he requests it, he may then enter your property for the sole purpose of picking his fruit. But he has no right to do this until you have refused to either give him this permission or to gather it for him. But in thus coming on your land he must use no force and do no damage, or you can sue him. To use force would be assault.

Of course, these are the general legal "rights" and "wrongs" of such a situation. The moral right of the situation would be for you to allow the neighbor to come on and pick his fruit. And the moral right thing for him to do would be to divide the fruit that hangs over on your property with you.



A—You Can Pick the Neighbor's Fruit and Give It to Him. B—You Can Let Him Come to Your Land and Pick His Fruit. C—You Can Make Him Cut off Every Limb and Branch That Hangs Over Your Land.

Hard and Soft Water for Cooking

ALL cooks do not understand the different effects produced by hard and soft water in cooking meat and vegetables. Peas and beans cooked in hard water, containing lime or gypsum, will not boil tender because these substances harden vegetable casein. Many vegetables, as onions, boil nearly tasteless in soft water, because all the flavor is boiled out. The addition of salt often checks this, as in the case of onions, causing the vegetables to retain their peculiar flavoring principles, besides such nutritious matter as might be lost in soft water. For extracting the juice of meat to make a broth or soup, soft water, unsalted, and cold at first, is the best, for it much more readily penetrates the tissue; but for boiling, where the juices should be retained, hard water, or soft water salted, is preferable; the meat should be put in while the water is boiling, so as to seal up the pores at once.

If you are in doubt about the water, the common test is soap. Hard water will not make a suds freely, while soft water will. Once acquainted with the nature of the cooking water you can govern yourself accordingly in cooking.

THINGS THE CAMERA SEES THAT WE DO NOT.

Training Soldiers by Pictures That Pick Apart Each Motion, Revealing Under-Water Life by Photographs Taken from River Bottoms, Pictures by Light Rays the Human Eye Cannot Grasp

> "Through the artificial eye of the camera and the moving picture machine, we are now able to analyze motions too fast for the human eye to perceive unaided, and through this analysis of motion science is now able to get a keener insight into the processes of natural phenomena than could be obtained in any other way. The camera and the moving picture will ultimately lay bare many of Nature's darkest secrets."

A Remarkable Photograph Taken on a Single Plate but Showing Nine Successive Stages of an Athlete Executing a Somersault Over a Vaulting Horse. Athletic Instructors Are Using These Pictures in Their Work.

Pictures of This Kind Are Made Possible by the Use of a Fast Lens and a Rapid Shutter. Nine Distinct Exposures Made While the Athlete Was Somersaulting Were Necessary to Produce This Picture.

At the School of Gymnastics and Fencing at Joinville, France, where the French soldiers receive instruction and training in those subjects, Lieutenant Colonel Boblet, the director, is now using the camera as a valuable adjunct to his work.

Gymnastic instructors have always found it hard to pick out the flaw in the work of their pupils and even harder to demonstrate to the pupils just wherein they fail. There is all the difference in the world between the way in which a given feat should be performed and the way it is actually performed by the student, but this difference is frequently hard to detect and always hard to explain.

This difficulty arises from the fact that the eye is not quick enough to analyze the myriad successive motions involved in every gymnastic feat, and the more rapid the feat the more the eye misses. In fencing this is particularly true, for the foils move through the air with the greatest rapidity and even an expert fencing instructor cannot always follow them and show the fencers wherein their strokes were deficient.

To overcome this difficulty in athletic instruction Lieutenant-Colonel Boblet is now using the chrono-camera. This instrument is a sort of cross between the ordinary camera and the moving-picture machine, combining features of both of those instruments

Like an ordinary camera, it uses but a single plate, but like the moving picture machine, it portrays as many of the successive motions of the subject as the operator wishes to obtain. The result is obtained by the use of an extra fast lens and a specially constructed shutter. Successive exposures at the rate of twenty or thirty a second, if necessary, may thus be made, and on a single plate a man jumping from a chair to the ground, for instance will be depicted in several successive stages of the jump.

Pictures made in this way readily disclose to both instructor and pupil exactly how the pupil performed the athletic feat in question, and it is a simple matter for the instructor to point the mistakes the student made.

Lieutenant-Colonel Boblet has found this method of analysis particularly valuable in such athletic events as the broad jump, the high jump, the hurdle, the pole vault, the vaulting horse, the somersault, the start of a sprint and in fencing. Errors in technique which would inevitably escape the keenest eye, are plainly disclosed in these pictures, and the student is easily made to understand how to correct them.

One of the most remarkable pictures of this character is shown in the centre of this page. It shows one of the soldier athletes in the act of executing a somersault over a vaulting-horse from a springboard. As a matter of fact, the picture apparently shows nine distinct men performing on the vaulting-horse, but the effect thus produced is due to the use of a very speedy shutter and a fast lens, which makes rapidly successive exposures feasible.

The moving picture machine used in making the films displayed in moving picture houses takes sixteen pictures per second, but each picture is on a separate section of film, which is passed behind the lens on rollers. Sixteen separate pictures are thus obtained in the course of a second. But in chrono-photography only one plate or film is used, the successive pictures all being taken on the same plate

The reason there is no appreciable blur is because the specially constructed shutter is fast enough to prevent it. From the time the athlete leaves the spring board until he has landed on his feet on the other side of the vaulting-horse, not quite a second elapses, and during that comparatively brief space of time the shutter opens and shuts no less than nine times, making nine distinct pictures, all on the same plate.

In the pictures taken of fencers, the rapidly moving foil is clearly shown. As it strikes the body of an antagonist and bends, the curves it makes are caught by the camera and produce a very remarkable picture

Most of the athletes whose work has been studied through the medium of chrono-photographs have readily recognized the errors they make and their work has improved considerably through the information thus derived

In the high jump and the pole vault and similar athletic feats, the position of a hand or foot may make considerable difference in the result obtained. A jumper whose record is 5 feet 6 inches in the running high jump may add an inch or even two to his record by improving his technique in some such minor detail.

By studying his eccentricities as revealed in the chrono-photograph, the athlete can keep on experimenting until he has found out how best to secure the best result. The photographs supply a permanent record of these things which is far more reliable than the memory and observation of even the keenest eyed instructor

There is nothing new in submarine photography in itself, but the methods employed in this valuable scientific work have been so vastly improved by Dr. Francis Ward, the well-known scientific observer, that the results he has obtained are far above anything before secured.

To make a thorough study of the habits of aquatic creatures, Dr. Ward constructed a photographic chamber below the surface of a pond which fishes and aquatic birds of all kinds inhabited

Concealed in this observation chamber, which has walls of plate glass the observer can watch the fish as they appear to each other in the water. In consequence of the darkness in the chamber and the light in the pond, the glass is converted into a mirror, and the fish merely sees himself and his surroundings reflected; while the observers can plainly see into the pond. It is thus possible to observe the most timid fish without disturbing him

But Dr. Ward was not satisfied with watching his subjects. He brought into use the moving picture machine and made some very remarkable exposures. To inure the fish to the sound of the cinematograph in operation he installed in the water a specially constructed contrivance to make a noise exactly like the moving-picture machine. This machine was kept in operation at all times and proved so successful that fishes, accustomed to its noises came within range of the real cinematograph without the slightest hesitation.

Dr. Ward was able to make some particularly interesting observations of trout, correcting some preconceived notions of the customs of that fish.

It has previously been understood, for instance, that the female trout dug a hole in the gravel, and after depositing her eggs therein, covered them carefully with sand, using her snout for the purpose. Dr. Ward ascertained, however, that the actual operation was just the reverse. He found that the trout, lying on her side, removes the grains of sand about her, and digs a sort of trench in which she deposits her eggs.

Then she draws herself along a little distance and repeats the operation. While she is laying a new quantity of eggs in the new trench she waves her tail about and thus replaces the sand previously removed.

Dr. Ward describes the fierce fights which go on among the male trout, while the female is thus usefully engaged

"I placed in my pond three large rainbow trout," he declares, "one of which was a female. One morning I noticed that the surface of the pond was much troubled and I hurried down into my observation chamber. The two male trout were engaged in a fierce combat which last fully twenty minutes.

"They chased each other around the basin, and one sometimes succeeded in biting the other's tail Suddenly the latter turned on his antagonist and the fight began in earnest.

"After some swift lunges the stronger succeeded in grasping the weaker with his jaws and threw him violently on his back. Exhausted, he finally let go, and the victim rose slowly to the surface, where he soon expired."

Dr. Ward has taken some marvellous pictures of herons in his pond. These pictures show the acquatic bird in almost every conceivable position and form a valuable addition to the knowledge hitherto available regarding the habits of these creatures below water

The Latest from London--Dress Like a "Nut"

It is settled over in London that all men of fashion must dress like a "Nut." A "Nut" is a gilded youth with little else on his mind besides his clothes. His waist line has not yet been sacrificed by high living, and the keynote of his scheme of dress is to emphasize that fact.

Latterly the gracefully tapering waist has been obscured by a certain easy looseness in the style of coats. During the past few years serious politicians have provided the dominating element, and one of the results has been that leadership in social influence has given to serious politicians authority to set the fashion in coats. To carry the cachet of a well dressed man it has been necessary to look like a member of Parliament, and since most men who have arrived at settled political opinions have developed matured and responsible figures a graceful waist has been demode.

But during the past two seasons the social influence of the "Nut" has been increasingly asserting itself, owing, in part, it is thought, to the craze for a style of dancing incompatible with an attitude of deep wisdom.

The first manifestation of their authority is the revival of the waist, a slender eloquence being one of the distinguishing marks of a true "Nut." All coats are being made close-fitting and cut tapered to the waist in the most pronounced manner possible. The overcoats of last season with pleated skirts and a band at the back are quite out of fashion.

The correct morning coat will be almost impossible to a man of matured opinions, since it will be worn not only shaped to the waist, but cut open in front, with low lapels, and built without buttons at all. It does not quite meet in front, and is fastened by means of a single detachable silken link, which connects the single pair of buttonholes. No arrangement better calculated to exaggerate any rotundity of view could be contrived. This silken link, the more advanced 'Nuts' are understood to expect, may develop after a time into a gold chain with jewelled or enamelled buttons

This, however, is not all. With the tight-waisted coats peg top trousers are to be worn. Not very peg top, but with a distinct tendency toward peg-toppishness, fuller at the thigh and narrower at the ankle than for many years past. Waisted coats demand the accompaniment of peg top trousers. To this development the short skirts and neatly shod feet of the female mode have conduced by suggestion.

Spats are completely to disappear. They would not harmonize with peg-top trousers, which will be worn turned up.

All coats will have outside breast pockets, which have been taboo for years. The closer fit to the figure of the new fashions requires much more exact tailoring methods, and one ultra-smart tailor is now constructing a sort of papier-mache bust model for each of his clients so as to insure a perfect creaseless fit. This model is made by means of a new machine. The client is first fitted in a kind of paper camisole, which the tailor winds about with a tape-like strip of adhesive paper, so that it is shaped exactly to his figure. When removed from his body it is placed upon a stand and inflated by a bellows arrangement to his exact mold, and upon this dummy the tailor fits the coat

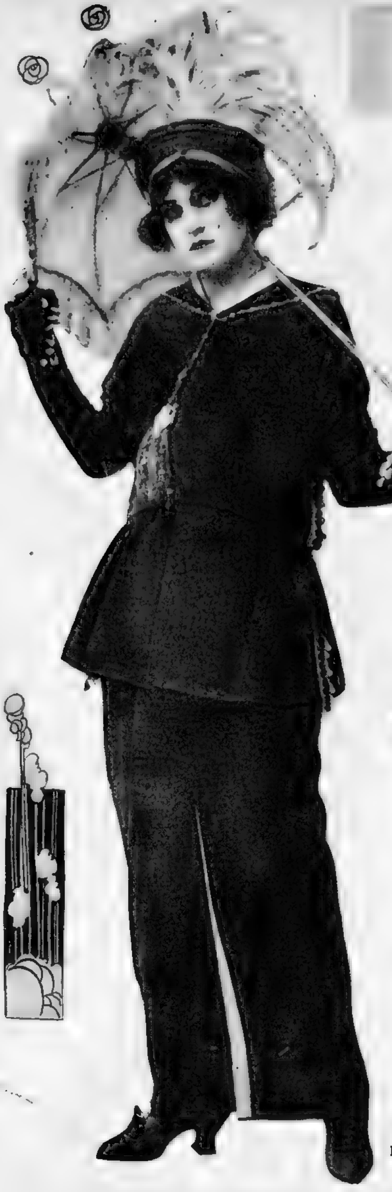
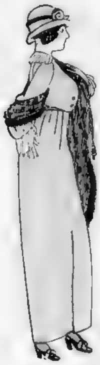
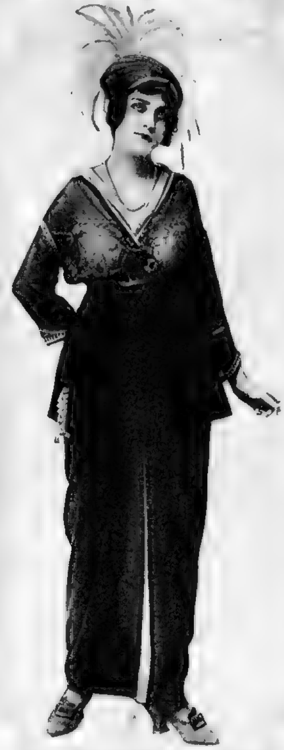
The Newest Trousers Gowns

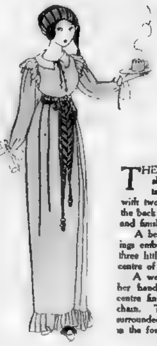


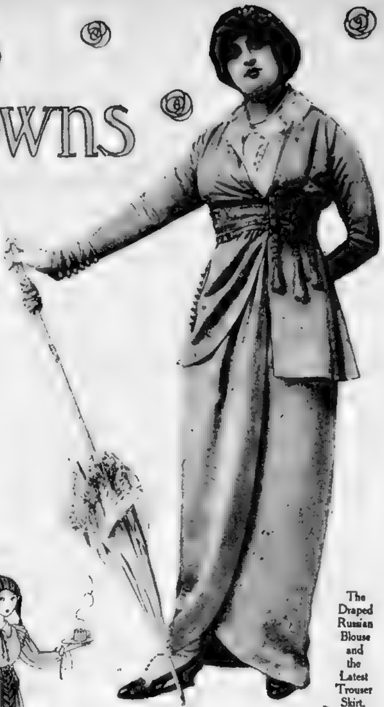
The "Tolstoy" Costume, Showing the Novelist's Blouse and the Near-Trouser Skirt.





"The Newest Bodices Must Be of Chiffons and Worn Over White Lace."





The Draped Russian Blouse and the Latest Trouser Skirt.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile").

IN the Spring the feminine fancy lightly turns to fashions bizarre. We have always a certain number of what I call freak fashions, and we indulge our love for the new and novel by adopting these in their turn. It is because of the newness of the Spring; the annual budding of the flowers, and the flowing of the sap in the trees and shrubs makes us long, like the earth, to cast aside our Winter trappings and to put on as many new things as our pocketbooks permit. And this is why I think that we women wear in these Spring months gowns and hats that we would not wear at any other season.

As I have told you many times, this season finds remarkably few freakish hats, but as though to compensate for this our gowns have many unusual features. And among these are the slit skirts and the near-trousers that some of the mondaines are wearing.

I am sending you this week two models that I think show the new ideas to their best advantage. The first one is the Tolstoy gown. The skirt, as you will see, fastens in the front. The two sides are brought together, the left over the right. The left side is faced with satin of a contrasting color. This arrangement gives the near-trouser effect. The peasant blouse is what gives the name to the whole costume, for it is modelled on the lines of those worn by Tolstoy when he lived the simple life on his Russian estate. The peplum is attached to the skirt, as you can see in the second figure. The blouse is plain and tight and draws on over the head like a jersey. This whole costume is created in old blue chiffon broadcloth. The skirt facing is a bright green.

Worn with this is a charming little hat of butter color straw swathed with blue and green shot silk. The feather fancy outspreading at the back is the shade of the hat.

The second figure shows the bodice worn with the Tolstoy costume. It is a very charming little affair of blue chiffon over green chiffon, and worn over a lace slip. It is simple, but delightfully chic. And right here let me tell you that the day of the marquesette and voile has passed for bodices, and we are back where we started from—the chiffon counter. Everything that can be made of chiffon must be. This is obligatory.

In the third picture I am showing you what I consider the most chic model of the Russian blouse that I have created. This one is created in a delightful new shade of rose that Paris adores. It is a shade just between the old American beauty and the clear rose pink. It is the favorite shade this year of the Princess Louise, the only daughter of the Emperor of Germany, who is getting her trousseau this season—but very few things, alas, in Paris!

This shade of rose was designed for her, and is just being put on the market here. I have created this charming costume in this shade, and am sorry that you cannot see it in color. The fabric is a lovely supple ratine. You must know that there are many different kinds of this popular fabric, each one very suitable for just such costumes as this.

The blouse has one side curved and draped in a very odd manner. The front opens to the girdle. And this girdle is made of a very ornate figured velvet.

The skirt is one of the fastened-over skrits. The back is seamless, and the fronts fasten over in the approved manner to give the trouser effect. The hat worn with this is a tiny close-fitting Milan straw trimmed with tiny tight rosebuds the shade of the gown.

Paris, April 25.

THE chic Parisienne is now giving a great deal of attention to the shoes and stockings she wears in the evening, at balls and "au Restaurant." Her newest craze is to have her evening shoes made with two long pieces of velvet studded with diamonds; these come from the back of the shoe, and are then bound round the ankle, Greek fashion, and finish half way up the leg with a diamond ornament.

A beautifully dressed Parisienne has the clocks of her flesh silk stockings embroidered with pearls; just a line of pearls up each side, with three little Empire leaves, made of pearls, finishing the clock. From the centre of these hangs a small tassel, also made of pearls.

A well-known Russian princess, who is renowned for the beauty of her hands and jewels, is wearing a circle of diamonds on the three centre fingers of her right hand, and from each comes a tiny diamond chain. These are all brought together at the wrist with one large pearl surrounded with diamonds. The string of diamonds then encircles her wrist in the form of a bracelet.
